BIENVENUE!

The ILA welcomes the 30+ countries represented at this year’s ILA global conference. As the ILA membership increases across the globe we extend our gratitude to our members who travel great distances to participate in the conference. The many countries and cultures represented here support our work of developing and engaging a more global and diverse membership in order to promote a deeper understanding of leadership knowledge and practices worldwide.

Conference Evaluation

www.ila-net.org/eval
Welcome to Montréal!

Excellent design can have a profound impact on our lives. We believe we have designed a conference that will do justice to its host city of Montréal, the only North American city designated a UNESCO City of Design, and to the ILA’s tradition of cross-sector, cross-disciplinary, and cross-cultural collaborative learning as we together explore the conference theme Leadership for Local and Global Resilience: The Challenges of a Shifting Planet.

Our desire in constructing this year’s conference and theme track was to explore our interconnected world and how what we do in one place impacts, inspires, and influences what happens elsewhere on the planet. In this 21st century, leaders have an urgent need to reflect and act locally and globally, and with great resilience, while dealing with myriad economic, social, and environmental crises and disasters.

We anticipate that this time together will be an opportunity to reflect on how leadership, the environment, and the design of our spaces and organizations interact to support thriving communities. We hope that the conference design will inspire knowledge building and the development of leaders able to adapt to new conditions and emerging challenges with artistry and in ways that serve both the collective and the planet.

Now it’s time for you to design your own conference experience! Options include a record number of pre-conference choices and many special events in addition to close to two hundred presentations, various networking opportunities, community meetings, and four outstanding keynotes all dedicated to building local and global resilience in unique ways. As you construct your time here, we encourage you to open your hearts, minds, and senses to unexpected opportunities to share, grow, learn, and definitely to have fun.

We are confident that you will take home plenty of memories of the delights Montréal has to offer, from an array of distinguished artistic performances (including on Halloween night!), to some of the world’s best gourmet chefs. May this conference nourish in each of you an invigorated appetite to keep exploring and taking your leadership research and practices to new heights of resilience.

On behalf of the ILA Montréal 2013 Planning Committee, welcome to Montréal, a member of the UNESCO Creative Cities Network!

Dear ILA Colleagues,

Welcome to the city of Montréal in the Canadian province of Quebec! The conference theme, Leadership for Local and Global Resilience: The Challenges of a Shifting Planet, draws our attention to big ideas and extraordinary leadership in challenging times.

No conference is complete without recognizing and thanking the many people who contributed to its success. We’d like to extend our gratitude and appreciation to our sponsors, local planning team, conference program committee, member communities, board of directors, and ILA staff. Their efforts and contributions have resulted in a conference filled with opportunities to grow and learn.

We hope that through this conference you will also become more engaged in the life of our member-based organization spanning nearly 100 countries. We celebrated our first full year as an independent non-profit organization and also our first year at the new ILA headquarters location in Silver Spring, Maryland. We adopted a new Strategic Plan (www.ila-net.org/about/StrategicPlan.pdf) with a focus on advancing the global study and practice of leadership; developing and engaging a more global and diverse membership; and strengthening ILA as a dynamic, sustainable, global organization.

Come learn more about ILA’s accomplishments and the association’s future plans by joining us on Saturday, November 2, from 8:00–8:45 a.m., for the annual ILA Membership Meeting.

Thank you for your presence and participation at the 15th Annual ILA Global Conference, in a city rich in multicultural history and a conference hotel that shares the ILA’s commitment to sustainability. Explore, engage and enjoy the conference and the beautiful city of Montréal!

Get Involved
with the ILA’s Member Communities

The ILA Member Communities are your opportunity to get more involved. Visit the Member Community tables on Wednesday just before the opening plenary and during the welcome reception. Also, consider attending their open meeting or special event to learn more; see the agenda overview for more details.

Member Interest Groups (MIG) promote the common interests of members in specific areas of the leadership field, develop special projects to serve the needs of their members, compile and distribute resources, and coordinate presentation tracks and networking activities for the global conference.

Business Leadership MIG
Join this MIG to discuss leadership development and effectiveness in corporate settings, and to share ideas, challenges, trends, and experiences related to sector-specific leadership interests.
2013 Chair: Karen Geiger, geigerk@queens.edu
2014 Chair: Amber Lineback, amber.lineback@piedmontng.com

Leadership Development MIG
What are the best methods for developing effective leaders and leadership processes? What tools or strategies can improve leadership development? Contribute to the dialogue by joining this MIG.
2013 & 2014 Chair: Almarie Munley, almadon@regent.edu

Leadership Education MIG
Universities and schools around the world are rapidly adding leadership programs and departments. Share ideas for programs, curricula, and methods of teaching and learning leadership. Wright State University is sponsoring a reception (invitation only) for the LE MIG Thursday evening in Hochelaga 4.
2013 Chair: Robert McManus, robert.mcmanus@marietta.edu
2014 Chair: Dan Jenkins, djenkins@usm.maine.edu

Leadership Scholarship MIG
How is leadership studied and measured? Collaborate with scholars and researchers to better understand the study of leadership and to disseminate the results of leadership research.
2013 Chair: Kevin Lowe, kblowe@uncg.edu
2014 Chair: Becky Reichard, becky.reichard@cgu.edu

Public Leadership MIG
What are the challenges faced by leaders in the public arena? Join this MIG to examine leadership strategies and solutions for those who help lead, work for, or study non-profit, social, civic, political, and governmental institutions.
2013 Chair: Erwin Schwella, Erwin.Schwella@spl.sun.ac.za
2014 Chair: Cynthia Robinson, crobinson@aaas.org

Youth Leadership MIG
The Youth Leadership MIG serves as a forum for all those across the generations who support, develop, or study youth leadership. Attend the Young Leaders Networking Dinner on Thursday to connect with fellow participants; tickets may still be available; check at the ILA Office (Saint-Charles).
2013 Chair: Andrew Henck, ahenneck@gmail.com
2014 Chair: Karan Saggi, KSaggi14@students.claremontmckenna.edu
Learning Communities (LC) are groups of ILA members who organize around areas of passion, and around questions that are most critical to their work in the field of leadership.

Ethics Forum LC
Explore the intersection of ethics and leadership through this ongoing forum. Attend the Ethics Forum LC community breakfast on Thursday to connect with fellow participants; tickets may still be available; check at the ILA Office (Saint-Charles).

LEADERSHIP
Legacy Program

Honoring Luminaries in the Field with the ILA Lifetime Achievement Award

Initiated in 2008, the Leadership Legacy Program honors individuals who have made a significant contribution to the field of leadership throughout the course of their careers. Each recipient of ILA’s Lifetime Achievement Award is recognized and their work celebrated at our global conference as well as after the conference via a virtual Legacy Wall. The ILA thanks Larraine Matusak for her leadership in creating this project and for her founding sponsorship. We also wish to thank the Randall L. Tobias Center for Leadership Excellence at Indiana University for conducting oral histories with our recipients, which are available online at www.ila-net.org/legacy.

Many participants tell us that the number of concurrent session choices can be a bit overwhelming! This guide draws attention to several helpful pieces of information beyond the session’s title and description that can help you understand more about each session’s focus, target audience, and format.

If you are interested in attending a session by a particular person, please refer to the presenter index at the end of this program book.

One indicator of the session’s focus, target audience, and presenter expertise is the track. This year the session and presentation titles are color coded (see track designations below) to help you quickly identify sessions accepted by the tracks that are of most interest to yourself; however, we encourage you to stretch yourself by attending sessions outside of your normal comfort zone. A plus sign (+) with the two letter track code indicates those presentations accepted by a second or third track.

Format should be another factor in your selection process: everyone has their own learning styles and preferences. The ILA uses the following definitions to create shared expectations between presenters and attendees.

Concurrent Session Formats:

Workshop: An interactive demonstration or experiential session rooted in audience participation and active learning. Half or more of the time should be spent on experiential learning and active audience participation focused on learning a new skill or useful technique.

Symposium: Multiple presentations of papers or research findings related to a common, albeit often broad, subject area. Some include refereed papers submitted in their entirety and reviewed using the most stringent criteria. The commentator will moderate questions to help create a rich discussion among presenters and attendees. The chairperson keeps time and helps move the conversation along.

Presentation: Research, practices, topics, or programs presented by a single individual or team. Presentations on a common topic are often grouped together into a session. Otherwise, they were assigned 20 minutes and a room with a break between so attendees may pick and choose. The chairperson keeps time and helps move the conversation along.

Panel: Brief presentations on a topic by up to four people with contrasting or complementary points of view, followed by a discussion that invites the audience to add their perspectives, comments, and questions. The chairperson keeps time and helps move the conversation along.

Additional Formats:

Poster: A visual display of a program, paper, research, or project staffed by the creator(s) during the hosted poster session on Friday.

Roundtable: An informal small group discussion on a topic of common interest. Roundtables take place simultaneously in a large room; every 20 minutes a bell will ring allowing participants the opportunity to move to another roundtable or remain where they are. Roundtables are Thursday at 16:15 for 80 minutes in Marquette & Jolliet (for a complete listing of roundtables see page 57).

Guide to Track Designations:

- Business Leadership (BL)
- Leadership Development (LD)
- Leadership Education (LE)
- Leadership Scholarship (LS)
- Public Leadership (PL)
- Youth Leadership (YL)
- Conference Theme
Presentations were selected from amongst 500 submissions through a rigorous multi-phase review process. Each of the Member Interest Groups coordinated a track and experienced volunteers coordinated the theme track.

Phase 1 Blind Peer Review
Last November and December over 400 ILA members responded to a call for reviewers. Each volunteered for one of the seven presentation tracks and provided detailed information about their expertise. This information was used to match three or four reviewers to each submission. Reviewers were not assigned their own or a colleague’s submission, and they could not see presenter names and affiliations. The scoring rubric published on the ILA submission website was used to evaluate each submission. Refereed papers or refereed symposium submitted to the Leadership Scholarship Track were evaluated using an additional scoring rubric.

Phase 2 Track Chair Evaluations
The chairs for each track (see program committee below) worked together to confirm Phase 1 scoring. Then they set about to transfer any submissions they felt might be better served in another track. Over several weeks, they carefully read submissions and evaluations, created groupings, determined formats, and made very tough decisions about acceptances. Their discussions and evaluations created a high quality program to serve the diverse needs of the ILA community.

Phase 3 Notifications and program finalization
After confirming that all requirements and guidelines were met, the ILA staff emailed status notifications in May to all individuals who submitted proposals to the conference. Soon after, presenters were notified about their session type and time slot. Subsequently, chairpersons and moderators were recruited and the staff worked with presenters to ensure the accuracy of the program book descriptions and session formats.

Phase 4 Track Chairs decide if a session has ‘crossover’ appeal
In August, the track chairs reviewed a list of the presentations whose submitters indicated that their presentations would cross over multiple tracks. The chairs selected the presentations that met their criteria for cross-track designation. A plus sign (+) with the two letter track code indicates those presentations accepted by a second track.

ILA 2013 Conference Program Committee
The ILA thanks the following members of the program committee for their dedication and volunteer time; without their involvement it would be impossible to present this spectacular program here in Montréal.

KEYNOTE SPEAKER
Charles Bronfman

A Foundation of Resilience: Leadership Lessons for the Philanthropic, Corporate, and Sports Sectors

Charles Bronfman is chairman of The Andrea & Charles Bronfman Philanthropies, a family of charitable foundations operating in Israel, the U.S., and Canada. The Philanthropies are committed to encouraging young people to strengthen their knowledge and appreciation of their history, heritage, and cultural identity. Bronfman is co-chairman of Birthright Israel, which provides an educational travel experience to Israel for young Jewish adults throughout the world aged 18–26.

His life-long commitment to Jewish affairs led him to serve, from 1999 to 2001, as the first chairman of the United Jewish Communities, the merged North American entity comprised of United Jewish Appeal, the Council of Jewish Federations, and United Israel Appeal. In 2002 he and his late wife Andrea were awarded Honorary Citizenship of Jerusalem, only the second and third North Americans to receive this honor.

Bronfman retired following a 50-year career with The Seagram Company Limited. In addition, for 22 years he was the chairman and principal owner of the Montreal Expos, the first Major League Baseball club to exist outside of the United States. In 1992, over a memorable 24-hour period, Bronfman was honored by making the ceremonial first pitch at the World Series in Toronto, the first such contest ever to be played outside the U.S. At noon the next day, in Ottawa, he became a Member of the Queen’s Privy Council for Canada and later that evening was inducted as a Companion of the Order of Canada, the highest civilian honor in this country.

More recently, he co-authored, with Jeffrey Solomon, The Art of Giving, Where the Soul Meets a Business Plan, and The Art of Doing Good.
Leadership Legacy Award winner

The Lifetime Achievement Award will be bestowed upon Henry Mintzberg at the general session on Wednesday

Leadership Legacy Honoree

Henry Mintzberg

Henry Mintzberg was born in 1939 in Montréal. He received a bachelor’s degree in mechanical engineering from McGill University in 1961, and a bachelor’s degree in general arts from Sir George Williams (now Concordia) University in 1962. After a brief but formative stint in operational research for Canadian National Railways, Mintzberg completed his master of science and doctorate degrees at MIT’s Sloan School of Management. He returned to McGill and became a full professor in 1978, and was later appointed Cleghorn Chair of Management Studies in the Desautels Faculty of Management, a post he still holds. He has also served as a visiting scholar at INSEAD (France), Carnegie Mellon University, and the London Business School, among others.

Mintzberg’s research interests have been leaders or managers – he does not differentiate between the two roles, and his method is in part to observe actual people as well as the organizational structure upon which their actions are contingent. He considers the basis and understanding of managerial work in this context. Before Mintzberg, many believed that leaders spent the majority of their time strategizing and decision making, but his research suggested that much of the manager’s or leader’s work is about day-to-day communication, relationship building, and doing the “small things.” He also looks at the forms of organization and how different parts of the group work together. These foci inform Mintzberg’s work on strategy, both its formation and its implementation. Regarded as one of the world’s foremost business strategy experts and one of the most original minds in management, Mintzberg’s research method – structured observation in the field – was a challenge to the descriptive and methodologically oriented research carried out by scholars at the time. His method was quickly replicated, survived several challenges, often revisited, and still generates scholarship today.

The Lifetime Achievement Award will be bestowed posthumously upon Ralph Stogdill at the general session on Thursday.

Leadership Legacy Honoree
Ralph Stogdill

Ralph Stogdill is one of the pioneers in focusing on leader behavior from a psychological perspective. Over 60 years ago, Stogdill published the first of his many articles on leadership. Titled “Personal Factors Associated with Leadership: A Survey of the Literature,” this influential and much reprinted article launched his career and marked a turning point in the study of leadership.

Stogdill completed both his bachelor’s degree and his master’s degree in psychology at Ohio State University in 1930. He remained as a doctoral student of H.H. Goddard and studied clinical psychology from 1931 to 1934, when he received his PhD. His earliest work was in clinical psychology. For most of the time between 1934 and 1942, he was a psychologist with the Ohio Bureau of Juvenile Research. His diagnostic and therapeutic work was supplemented by research that led to 13 articles concerning attitudes, adjustment, delinquency, and retardation among juveniles. During World War II, Stogdill served as a lieutenant commander in the U.S. Maritime Service, working principally in selection and classification.

In 1946 he became associated with the Ohio State Leadership Studies. This position marked the beginning of his continuous involvement in leadership research, an involvement that lasted beyond his retirement. His research contribution during this time consisted of more than 50 articles based on original data, many contributed chapters, and 16 books and monographs. He developed eight different sets of measurement scales and manuals and directed five films concerning various aspects of leadership and leader development. Even decades after his death, Stogdill’s contributions are a model of leadership for us all.
Lessons from the Echo-Maker: Principles and Practices of Leadership from an Indigenous Perspective

Bob Watts is an expert in Aboriginal policy, negotiations, and conflict resolution. He previously served as CEO of the Assembly of First Nations and the interim executive director of the Canada’s Truth and Reconciliation Commission. Watts led the process, supported by an excellent team and many Canadian and international organizations, to establish the Commission. Watts also served as the chief of staff to the Phil Fontaine, national chief of the Assembly of First Nations, where he was a member of the team that negotiated the Indian Residential Schools Settlement Agreement, the largest class action settlement in Canada’s history. Watts is a former assistant deputy minister for the Government of Canada.

Watts has led the negotiations of co-management agreements, helped build strong corporate partnerships, and has lead processes focused on strategic plans and community development. He has worked as a practitioner and trainer in both negotiations and conflict resolution. He is also a governor of the Ridgewood Foundation for Community Based Conflict Resolution, and is a Fellow at the European Institute for Community Based Conflict Resolution. He has taught, debated, and lectured at a number of universities in Canada and the United States.

Watts is a graduate of the Harvard University John F. Kennedy School of Government and a Fellow at the Harvard Law School where he researched and lectured on the role culture plays in conflict. Some of his Indigenous learning has focused on medicinal plants, traditional songs, traditional environmental knowledge, and leadership.

Watts is from the Mohawk and Ojibway Nations and resides at Six Nations Reserve, Ontario.

Are They Getting It?: Outcomes and Assessments in Leadership Education

- Jolliet
- Symposium
- Leadership Education

Chair: Rian Satterwhite, Holden Center for Leadership & Community Engagement, University of Oregon

An Exploration of Leadership Undergraduate Curricula: A Practical and Critical Review

The presentation will provide an analysis of the curricular design of 26 undergraduate Organizational Leadership programs in the U.S. using an approach suggested by Brungardt et al. (2006) and share results indicating that although there is a great deal of overlap in general academic coverage, there is less agreement in leadership core competency coverage. Implications concerning the long-term positioning, evaluation, and recognition of leadership degrees will be discussed.

Kris Gerhardt, Leadership Program, Wilfrid Laurier University
Lamine Diallo, Leadership Program, Wilfrid Laurier University

Developing a Competency-Based Program

This presentation will showcase the study that led to the development of the Student Leadership Competencies, a universal list of leadership competencies translated for nearly every academic discipline. Both the process and outcome of this study have helped shift University of Arizona Leadership Programs into a multi-faceted competency-based approach. Participants will learn about the findings from the study, how to use the Student Leadership Competencies, and how to create a competency-based program.

Corey Seemiller, Leadership Programs, University of Arizona

Exploring the Integration of Socially Responsible Leadership and Efficacy Among Campus Programs

The Multi-Institutional Study of Leadership examines college student leadership development and includes a number of core scales that can be used to study leadership development and education. Using its campus’ MISL data, this research sought to examine socially responsible leadership and leadership efficacy. The presentation will share results including interesting data and discussion points about integrated leadership development and using the social change model to guide structure and a theoretical framework.

Authentic Leadership: Perspectives from Neuroscience, Psychology, and Today’s Digital Age

Duluth • Symposium • Business Leadership

CHAIR: Zachary Gabriel Green, Department of Leadership Studies, SOLES, University of San Diego

Four presenters will offer thought-provoking approaches to the study and practice of authentic leadership, at times questioning common basic assumptions about authenticity. Spanning across disciplines, these unique views on authentic leadership originate from neuroscience, self-based psychology, and self-determination theory. Current barriers to leader authenticity will be considered, including those created by the pervasiveness of online communications today.

Can Neuroscience Advance the Understanding of Authentic Leadership?
There is an emergent synergy between neuroscience and organizational research, which includes theoretical and practical implications for authentic leadership. This presentation will review four facets of authentic leadership against the theoretical and empirical backdrop of neuroscience, with particular attention to social, cognitive, and affective neuroscience. The presenter will offer insights on theoretical propositions and developmental initiatives to advance the understanding of authentic leadership.

Paul McDonald, Victoria Business School, Victoria University of Wellington

Authentic Leadership vs. Web 3.0: A Fight for Identity and Relationship
Authentic leadership requires maintaining self-knowledge and authentic relationships, but what can leaders do when confronted with barriers to achieving both? As web-driven information overload and online social communications (Web 3.0) continue to emerge and hinder self-knowledge and authentic relationships, what action should leaders take? How might leaders manage themselves and others as they navigate a world influenced by today’s digital landscape? After examining how Web 3.0 can interfere with authentic leadership, this presenter will explore how leaders can respond.

Brian Davenport, Leadership and Organizational Studies Program, Lewiston-Auburn College, University of Southern Maine

An Alternative Approach to Conceptualizing and Measuring Leader Authenticity
The age-old issue of human authenticity remains intriguing and highly relevant in modern times. Today’s globalized, fast-paced, and complex environment regularly presents obstacles to leaders’ personal and professional practice of authenticity. Existing frameworks for authenticity in leadership, however, do little to explain how psychological/behavioral factors contribute to leaders’ expression of authenticity. Grounded in person-centered psychology, self-based theory, and self-determination theory, a new conceptual approach will be offered that emphasizes what it takes for a leader to be authentic.

Taylor Peyton Roberts, Department of Leadership Studies, SOLES, University of San Diego

Assessing Leadership: Emerging Healthcare Leaders Face Challenges

Harricana • Panel • Public Leadership

Providing appropriate access to affordable healthcare has been an ongoing challenge for the U.S. healthcare system. In addition, leaders are also finding the cultural and social challenges of healthcare more demanding. Thus, healthcare leaders are under increasing pressure to lead their organizations through rapidly changing health care reform and improve financial performance. Healthcare leaders now have to assess their organization’s leadership and strategies due to the rapid reform. How can healthcare and public policy leaders prepare for this transition?

Latanya Hughes, American Public University
Karen Bolser, Regent University
Autoethnographic Reflections, Analyses, and Critiques of Multicultural Leaders in Our Shifting World

• Saint-Maurice • Symposium • Leadership Scholarship

CHAIR: Karen A. Longman, Doctoral Programs in Higher Education, Azusa Pacific University

This panel will include two individual and collaborative autoethnographic studies of multicultural and multifaceted leaders from the U.S. and Australia. The researchers, who live in culturally diverse environments requiring resiliency and the ability to negotiate shifting identities, powers, and legitimacy as leaders, adopted autoethnography as the most appropriate tool by which to reflect, analyze, and critique their own experiences as leaders within their diverse, and sometimes hostile, cultural contexts.

Mentoring Experiences of Leaders of Color in Faith-Based Higher Education: A Collaborative Autoethnography

This presenter will share the findings of a collaborative autoethnography research project involving 14 faculty and administrators of color who had been identified as emerging leaders within faith-based higher education. Research questions guiding the study were: “What kind of mentoring have leaders of color in higher education received as they have professionally developed and advanced?” and “How have their mentoring experiences contributed to their commitment to their work in faith-based higher education?” Project findings and implications for practice will be discussed.

Heewon Chang, PhD in Organizational Leadership Program, Eastern University
Michelle Loyd-Paige, Calvin College

Leadership and Ministry at Five Tables: An Autoethnography within an Australian Context

This paper provides autoethnographic insights from the perspective of an Australian who has been practicing authentic and servant leadership as a pediatric surgeon, Anglican priest, Zen teacher, family man (spouse, father, and grandfather), and a trainer of mindfulness with individuals incarcerated at a local prison. The presenter will analyze his own multi-faceted leadership within the framework of servant leadership (Greenleaf, 2002), authentic leadership (George, 2004), and transformative leadership (Bass & Riggio, 2006).

Mervyn Lander, School of Theology, Charles Sturt University

CEO-Level Succession Planning in Nonprofits: The Right Emotional and Psychological Mindset for Successful Leadership Transitions

• Richelieu • Presentation • Public Leadership

Quite arguably, the degree to which a transfer of professional leadership is successful hinges on how well executives, board chairs and organizations proactively and collaboratively plan for the non-logistical dimensions of the actual stepping-down phase. An additional key determinant is how well the executives pro-actively prepare for post-organizational life through encore careers or other options including meaningful retirement. This session presents action steps emerging from both a comprehensive 2012 survey on CEO-level succession planning in nonprofits and a 3-day workshop convened for 20 long-tenured executives in their early- to mid-60s.

Charismatic Leadership in Terrorist Organizations: The Tamil Tigers, Shining Path, and FARC

CHAIR/COMMENTATOR: Tim H. Blessing, Department of the Humanities, Alvernia University

This session will explore the use of systems theoretical concepts to analyze charismatic leadership through studies of three charismatic terrorist leaders. Using a modification of Weber’s classic charismatic leader definition, the presenters will establish the systems in which the three studied leaders were embedded and then explore general propositions regarding the use of systems concepts to analyze leadership.

Abimael Guzmán: Leader of Peru’s Shining Path
This paper applied systems analytics to the role that Abimael Guzman played in leading the Shining Path. The presenter will analyze Guzman’s initial successes using trait, soft systems, and niche theories, and examine his failures using transformational and contextual leadership theories.

Tracey Brown, Institutional Review Board, Alvernia University

Leading in Shadows: Manuel Marulanda Vélez and FARC
The terrorist leadership of Manuel Marulanda Vélez was set at a remarkable confluence of political, social, economic, and geographic systems. The presenter will use soft systems theory to explore this confluence and the shaping of a Vélez as a terrorist leader.

Betty-Jo Legutko, Alvernia University

The Tamil Tigers’ Velupillai Prabhakaran: A Founding Terrorist Leader
The presentation will provide a systems analytic discussion of Prabhakaran and consider his post-colonial context, the issues of ethnicity, the development of older forms of terror, and his ability to create a cultural-military followership which engaged in significant acts of self-destruction and murder.

Global Leadership: Clarity around Concepts and Complications in Practice

CHAIR/COMMENTATOR: Lize AE Booysen, PhD in Leadership and Change Program, Antioch University

In Search of Global Leadership
Leaders of major corporations agree that they need more global leaders in their managerial cadres, but most firms struggle to develop their existing managers into global leaders. The researchers contend that firms’ failures stem mainly from two “disconnects” — failing to understand what global leadership is, and failing to understand the core competencies needed for global leadership. Based on recent research, the presenter will share a framework to assist top management in addressing these two disconnects.

Human Resource Management in a Developing Country — Beliefs, Practices, and Challenges
This mixed-method study of 317 respondents investigated the HR beliefs and practices of HR practitioners in Nigeria and the extent to which the latter is impacted by contextual challenges. The findings reveal the existence of soft and hard HRM beliefs and practices, as well as a relationship between HR challenges and hard HRM practices. The presenter will examine the findings against the backdrop of the realities of managing in an evolving, dynamic, and complex socio-economic environment.

Sociocultural Influences on Leadership: Comparative Practices between the U.S. and Cameroon
There is increasing evidence in related literature of a link between leadership and cultural context. While there is rich body of literature on leadership in Western countries, there is comparatively less in developing countries. This empirical study is intended to help both educational institutions and global business organizations more effectively teach students and/or manage corporate human resources around the globe.

Authentic Leadership through Deep Dialog: How Presencing Enables Collective Intelligence  + LE

Within the field of leadership, the critical importance of a leader’s inner condition — the quality of presence, consciousness, and the clarity/depth of communication that a leader draws on — has been identified as significant. This presentation will briefly explore survey current research and report on a variety of organizational contexts where action research and practice concerning the refinement and development of key capacities of leaders’ inner condition have been conducted. Presenters will conclude with findings and implications for leadership development.

Awareness-Based Leadership Development: + LE + BL

How Practice and Coaching Facilitate Developmental Growth

Various leadership theorists have called for research on building an approach to leadership development based on constructivist adult developmental theory (McCauley et al., 2006). This presentation addresses how this theory, through an awareness-based approach, enhances adaptive leadership competencies (Heifetz et al., 2009) in a corporate setting with academic partnership. Data from two program cohorts and coaching of cohort members will be analyzed in relation to constructivist developmental theory (Kegan & Lahey, 2009) to contribute empirical data in this area.

Developing a Development-Based Leadership Development Program  + PL

This presentation will review the process that was used to convert a 110-year-old competency-based leadership development program into a developmental-based leadership program. It will inform the audience about the cultural, change management, and design challenges and opportunities that were encountered along the way. Current results from the program will also be reported.

Intentional Neighborhoods: Key to Regional Resilience

• MacKenzie  • Workshop  • Public Leadership

To be successful, intentional communities — whether innovative cohousing and ecovillages or more traditional condo associations and dormitories — need effective leadership and decision-making practices. Sociocracy offers a “many-mind” decision process that overcomes the inadequacies of majority voting, consensus, and even benevolent autocratic leaders with new structural concepts fueling delegated responsibility and authorization. In the workshop, participants will work in small groups to experience key structural principles and a new decision-making method, leaving with practical tools to use in any community. A representative from a local Montréal cohousing community that uses sociocracy will be present at the workshop to answer questions about local experience.

Ephemeral Leadership Development in Virtual Worlds
This presentation will argue that virtual worlds (such as Second Life) and video games offer opportunities for leadership development through the platform of an emergent leadership perspective called Ephemeral Leadership. While Ephemeral Leadership can be developed elsewhere, it is most noticeable in virtual worlds where participants, freed from the pressures of hierarchy and status, are able to practice and test their leadership abilities toward becoming better leaders and better people.

How to Write a Leader Self-Portrait that is Relevant in a Shifting Planet
Leadership development begins with knowing what behaviors leaders need to change. Such insight requires self-reflection. This presenter will provide a framework for leader metacognition (i.e., thinking about what we should think about regarding the leadership process) to assist in writing and understanding one’s leadership self-portrait (i.e., self-concept). The model is shaped by a comprehensive definition of leadership and a conceptual framework, and it evolved across five years of teaching and researching the leadership process at the Virginia Military Institute.

Leader-Follower Relationships

An Initial Model for Partnerships

If you want to teach people to dance, you teach the leader to lead, the follower to follow, and the couple to partner together. The skills are interlocking and interdependent because partnerships require two people, each of whom assumes an active role in the relationship. This presentation will explore leadership and followership as interdependent constructs, discuss a skills model incorporating both, and offer an outline for a research program.

Follower Forgiveness and Reactions to Leader Interpersonal Transgressions: A Theoretical Framework (Refereed Paper)

This paper presents a theoretical framework that examines follower forgiveness and reactions to an interpersonal transgression committed by a direct supervisor. The framework proposes that leader-member exchange and followership influence forgiveness accorded by the follower and further proposes that these relationships are moderated by perceptions of offense severity and the presentation of an apology by the leader. Forgiveness is then argued to impact turnover intentions and counterproductive behavior, as moderated by one’s level of continuance commitment.

Trust as a Key Aspect of the Overall Perception of Change in the Leader-Follower Relationship (Refereed Paper)

Establishing strong relationships between leaders and followers provides a means to adapt to an ever-changing environment. This study explored experiences shared by executive level leaders, who were asked by the head of their organization or large departmental unit to adapt to a new organizational direction, which required role adaptation. The outcome of this study expands existing leadership literature, further defining the environment, leadership attributes, conducts, and actions perceived to develop trust in the relationship between executive level leaders and followers.

Addressing Spirituality in a Diverse Leadership Program: Practical Implications from Research
In graduate leadership programs, encouraging the development of students' whole selves, including their spirituality (religious or not), supports authentic leadership, strengthens leadership in diversity, and provides a potential source of personal resilience. Including spirituality is challenging in a nonsectarian academic program where faculty and students represent many different worldviews and there is limited classroom time available. The presenters will share ongoing research into student and faculty views on including spiritual topics in leadership education that has yielded some practical insights for faculty.

MOOC’S and LMX? Surveying Intersections between Massive Open Online Courses and Leader-Member Exchange Theory
Massive open online courses (MOOC’s) exploded in 2012. Early research from classroom assessments on cost-benefit analyses illustrate varied outcomes for this global shift in higher education. Researchers and institutions are quickly mobilizing in response to the call for education taking a new shape, while simultaneously holding the academy accountable to standards that make higher education a unique relationship between professor and student. This presentation will represent a review of current studies, literature, and discussions about MOOC’s and Leader-Member Exchange Theory intersections.

Disrupting Leadership Definitions: A Qualitative, Semi-Longitudinal Study of Undergraduate Conceptualizations of Leadership
Does teaching leadership matter? Do students actually learn? If so, what shifts might occur in students’ perspectives on leadership? Little research exists that tracks the changes in conceptualization of leadership over time in leadership education programs. This presentation will explore how students’ definitions of leadership changed over the course of a four-year leadership studies minor. Results from a semi-longitudinal study of leadership conceptualizations in traditional-aged undergraduate students will be presented and future directions suggested.

Chenwei’s winning submission – “Divergent Effects of Leader-Member Exchange Differentiation on Individual and Group Outcomes: A Multilevel Analysis” – will be presented Thursday, Oct. 31, from 13:30 to 14:30 in Hochelaga 5. Ellen van Velsor, Center for Creative Leadership, will chair the presentation.

Abstract
Drawing on justice and social comparison theories, this study examined leader-member exchange (LMX) differentiation as a group contextual variable that operates at both the group and individual levels. It was hypothesized that LMX differentiation is negatively related to group effectiveness, operationalized as group performance and organizational citizenship behavior (OCB) climate, via its negative impact on procedural justice climate. Also, it was proposed that LMX differentiation strengthens the relationship between relative idiosyncratic deals (i-deals), supervisory procedural justice, and employee outcomes at the individual level. Data from a U.S. sample of 961 employees nested in 71 restaurants supported the paper’s hypothesized model. Results of the study highlight the contextual role of LMX differentiation in impacting individual and group outcomes.

Leadership and Decision Making for Uncertain Environments (Refereed paper) + PL
This paper explores leadership decision-making models and their epistemological constructs. Many leadership scholars suggest that what is typically thought of as cognition in leadership theory (e.g., rational, analytical thinking) is insufficient because it does not account for practical problem solving that stems from experience, nor for creativity and innovation (Antonakis, et al., 2004). New paradigms for cognition have been identified but not yet operationalized widely. The ideas described in this paper seek to bridge this divide and promote operationalization of improved decision making.

Leading in Combat: The Role of Situation Awareness and Perceived Control during In Extremis Situations (Refereed paper)
For military teams faced with the threat of death, this study found that the generally accepted positive effects of training and experience may be insufficient to ensure survival and meet mission goals. Positive outcomes of acute events encountered by military team leaders did not correlate with general training, overall team leadership experience, or frequency of experience. Survey responses of 494 military leaders reveals situation awareness and perceived control trump training and experience in positive outcomes of in extremis events.

The presenters will provide an overview of the U.S. State Department’s TechWomen program, which brings 80 female STEM professionals from the Middle East and Africa to Silicon Valley for company mentorships. Key session components will include Skype chats with 2 TechWomen alumnae, small group discussions about both sides of the mentoring relationship, a full discussion on group findings, and first steps towards creating a personal mentoring plan.

Teaching Leadership beyond the Classroom: Experiential Education and Alternative Pedagogies

• Gatineau • Symposium • Leadership Education

Chair: Max Klau, City Year

Getting Outdoors: Cultivating Resilience in the Wilderness

How do leadership educators effectively prepare students for the increasingly complex, changing world and help them from getting in over their heads? And, how can this work be assessed? This presentation will explore how a federal service academy, the United States Naval Academy, and a non-profit, the National Outdoor Leadership School, effectively collaborate to provide undergraduate students with opportunities to test their campus-based leadership development, and their resilience, in a wholly new environment — the wilderness.

Dialogue through Dixie: Challenging the Master Narrative of Leadership and Social Change

Nineteen students traveled through five states in eight days on an inaugural Civil Rights Bus Tour, developed to empower students to understand their role in the leadership process, confront complex issues, promote social awareness, and work to create a more just society. This presentation will introduce the development and implementation of the Civil Rights Bus Tour, and offer lessons on teaching leadership and meaning-making in non-traditional settings.

Understanding the Intersection of Leadership and Entrepreneurship

• Harricana • Panel • Leadership Scholarship

Chair: Prince Attoh, Department of Educational Leadership, Delaware State University

This session will explore leadership behavior at three critical points in the entrepreneur life cycle: (1) at the launch of new business, (2) during a period of stability and/or maturation, and (3) post succession. The panel features three doctoral students who studied entrepreneurs in separate studies using qualitative and quantitative methods. The discussion will be a comprehensive look at what their research reveals about entrepreneur authenticity, ethical leadership, social cognition, social identity, and innovation.

There’s Still Work to Be Done: Variation in Representation of Women and Visible Minorities between and within Sectors in Greater Montréal

• Saguenay • Presentation • Business Leadership

This presentation will provide a snapshot of the representation of women and visible minorities in senior leadership positions in organizations across six sectors of Greater Montréal based on findings from a 2012-2013 DiversityLeads study. While women and visible minorities are found to be under-represented across sectors, the study highlights significant variations in representation between sectors and between organizations within a given sector. It sets a baseline for assessing diversity in workplaces across sectors and suggests important avenues for further research.

Developing & Sustaining Resilience: Insights and Research from Political/Military and Spiritual/Ethical Perspectives

* Hocelaga 6  •  Symposium  •  Public Leadership

Chairs: Bernice Ledbetter, Graziadio School of Business and Management, Pepperdine University

This symposium will consider the development and sustainability of resilience among leaders and within systems. Two papers explore how resilience develops through learning; the U.S. military offers a case study on how to maximize resilience for critical situations, and learning from the spiritual traditions provides wisdom on developing resilience in leaders and organizations. Two others address the sustainability of resilience, first under the conditions of moral stress among ethical leaders, and, secondly, in the context of competitive political systems within societies.

Resilience: Lessons from the U.S. Military
Empirical data will be presented on the U.S. Army’s conceptualization and approach to supporting the development of resilience in its personnel. This case study provides theoretical and practical best practices applicable to leadership development programs in various contexts.

George E. Reed, Department of Leadership Studies, SOLES, University of San Diego

Developing Resilience: Insights from the Abrahamic & Spiritual Traditions
Interpretations of wisdom literature from religious/spiritual traditions form a rich conceptual basis from which to examine resilience as an important quality of leadership and organizational sustainability. The presenter will draw on perspectives from the humanities, with an emphasis on the religious/spiritual literature, to address the question: How does resilience develop in the leader and in the organization?

David C. Greenhalgh, Office of Interdisciplinary Studies, Eastern University

Moral Stress in Ethical Leadership: Managing Paradox through Sustainable Resilience
Ethical leadership has an inherent paradox—dedication to consistency with regard to moral commitments often creates conflict due to competing commitments resulting in a particular type of stress. This paper explores the interplay between resilience and stress for ethical leaders and posits that sustainable resilience offers one possible adaptive response to the consequences associated with moral stress.

Bernice Ledbetter, Graziadio School of Business and Management, Pepperdine University

The Virtue of Competitive Politics: Advancing the Human Good
On the macro level, a political system with free and fair elections between multiple candidates vying for the same position demonstrates an ethic of virtue through competition. Such a system sustains its resiliency through competition; without competition the system is unable to produce superior value. This presenter will provide a theoretical framework for competitive politics as a demonstration of sustainable resilience. Consideration will be given to the implications of this framework for global political resilience leading to justice.

Examinations of Personality and Cultural Intelligence in Leadership

CHAIR: Andy Wefald, School of Leadership Studies, Kansas State University

Personality and Cultural Influences on Scenario Interpretation and Leadership Decision Behavior

The Dynamic Five Factor Model of Leadership (Seiler & Pfister, 2009) was used as an approach to measure the holistic interpretation of a scenario. A first study showed that not the structure of a scenario (e.g. time pressure, danger, formalization) but its holistic interpretation were the main predictors for decision behavior. In a second international study, the influence of culture and personality on holistic interpretation and on the leadership decision behavior were analyzed.

The Transferability of Cultural Intelligence Theory in the Ukraine (Refereed paper)

This three-phase research study examined the transferability of cultural intelligence concepts in the Ukraine. The study utilized the Cultural Intelligence Scale (CQS) which was translated and back-translated into Russian and Ukrainian, the main languages of the Ukraine. The outcomes to date clarified CQS terms and the concepts of cultural intelligence and cultural competence in the Ukraine. The presenter will share findings and discuss the final phase of the study.

What is the Role of Psychological Capital (PsyCap) in Developing Cultural Competence?

What enables successful development of cultural competence? Does development of cultural competence happen naturally or is it intentional? Psychological Capital (PsyCap), is a measure of an individual’s level of hope, efficacy, resiliency, and optimism. This session will present findings from the first phase of a sequential explanatory mixed methods study (Creswell & Plano-Clark 2011) that quantitatively explored the relationship between the PsyCap of a leader and change in cultural competence as measured by the Intercultural Development Inventory.

Developing Deep Resilience through Wise and Mindful Leadership

Thriving as a leader in today’s globally connected world requires unique combinations of awareness, compassion, intelligence, and resilience. Drawing on the presenters’ decades of experience with ancient spiritual traditions, leadership, organizational development, and embodied learning practices, this session will help participants clarify what they wish to do more and less of in order to enhance their resilience and leadership effectiveness. Exercises focused on mindfulness, dialogue, and somatic learning will help participants learn to be present in unfolding situations, notice and uproot negative emotions, and truly appreciate the varied people they lead.

Becoming Resilient: Playing at the Growth Edges

Participants will engage in discovering how resilience resides at the very places of individual growth edges. Through a series of activities and dialogue, participants will have opportunities to uncover individual responses to adversity, tap into vulnerabilities, and see failing forward as a seed of resiliency. This workshop design is grounded in the work of Andrew Zolli (2012), Brene’ Brown (2012), Jennifer Garvey-Berger (2011), David Snowden (2007), and Otto Scharmer (2009).

Gender, Diversity, and the Ethics of Authentic Leadership

The purpose of this session is to explore — both theoretically and empirically — how gender affects the development of authentic leadership, the roles values play in this process, and implications for authentic leadership theory and practice. From a mix of nationalities, backgrounds, and disciplines, the presenters will explore both the promises and the pitfalls of authentic leadership, emphasizing the ambivalent role played by values. Each presenter will answer questions related to their field and experiences with authentic leadership.

Searching for Mandela: The Saint as the Sinner Who Keeps on Trying
Is Nelson Mandela an authentic leader? When you look at him closely, you see two Mandelas — Mandela the man and Mandela the movement. The two identities overlap, yet they are not quite the same. This study of Mandela illustrates the problems with authentic leadership and why the theory is especially bad at explaining the moral behavior of iconic leaders.

Joanne B. Ciulla, Jepson School of Leadership Studies, University of Richmond

The Implications of Authentic Leadership for Women
Experts on leadership who have defined authenticity generally don’t consider the situation of members of groups who have had little access to leader roles. After an examination of how establishing trust and authority in leadership roles offers special challenges for women and other “outsider” leaders, the presenter will discuss how understanding these nuances of authenticity can be helpful in assisting members of underrepresented groups to become effective leaders.

Alice H. Eagly, Department of Psychology, Northwestern University

Authentic Leadership, Gender and Diversity: An Empirical Study
This empirical research focused on authentic leadership, gender, and diversity at a large French company known for its investments to promote diversity and equality. The presenters will discuss whether a diverse work environment improves the development of authentic leadership among managers, especially female managers.

Practical Knowledge Assumptions of Leadership “Science” Properly Understood: A Case Study of One Doctoral Program

This paper uses the theoretical and methodological premises of James C. Scott and Bent Flyvbjerg to analyze a case doctoral program in leadership. It focuses on two example dissertations, and how they demonstrate the benefits of conducting leadership research according to the premise of “practical knowledge,” a composite term the author constructs and defines that combines the parallel thinking of both authors.

Leadership, Culture and Gender Cross-Roads: A Case Study of the Implementation of a Western Healthcare Program in Tanzania

This paper analyzes a case study on the implementation of a healthcare program in a remote region of Tanzania. Contrary to original expectations, the program’s success is largely a function of its highly nuanced accommodation to tribal and religious cultures rather than technical expertise.

Magdeline Aagard, Department of Leadership, Policy & Administration, University of St. Thomas

The Mobius Effect: Theory and Practice in a Continuous Loop Curriculum

This paper, written by a former student of the program studied in paper #1, discusses how a leadership program featuring continuous reflective practice illuminates current and previous leadership experiences. The bulk of the paper analyzes how programmatic assumptions were embodied within his dissertation, which combined core elements of his career path and abiding interest in the Zuni and Mexican cultural traditions.

Educational Leadership and Resiliency — What Can We Learn from Environmental and Business Paradigms?

This paper argues that global concerns about the sustainability of educational leadership suggest that it needs to examine new paradigms to meet such challenges. It critically examines whether the use of the concept of resilience in environmental and business literatures can provide new insights into how the term might be better understood in education in order to develop a more sustainable educational leadership.

Faculty Who Become Academic Administrative Leaders: Resilience in the Midst of Shifting Identity

Faculty who become academic administrative leaders experience shifts in their professional, and sometimes personal, identity. They must build and maintain resilience as they navigate both tangible and intangible aspects of the transition. Findings from a study of 50 faculty who have become administrative leaders will be explained, questions posed, experiences shared, and broader implications discussed.

Memories with Momentum: Using the Arts to Enhance the Capacity for Resilience in Individuals and Communities

- Saguenay • Symposium • Conference Theme

CHAIR: David W. Frantz, School of Business and Economics, Indiana University East

Memories with momentum are meaningful memories that positively influence future practice and active memories that individuals use to form and evaluate future action (Sutherland, 2013). Memories with momentum can be a source of energy that builds the capacity for resilience. This panel will explore three different approaches to using the arts to evoke or create memories with momentum. One presentation will focus on research, one on an individual application, and one on a community application.

Affording Memories with Momentum in Leadership Development

Around the globe there are pockets of educators creating evocative settings where executives of all stripes are exploring the dynamics of organizational life and leadership through painting, dancing, poetry, composing, conducting, and more. While this is still a developing field, results from such learning interventions are pointing to significant results, particularly in developing memories with momentum. This presentation will explore some of the unfolding research related to the use of arts-based learning methods.

Ian D. Sutherland, School of Postgraduate Studies, IEDC Bled School of Management

A Picture is Worth 1,000 Words: Using Visual Images to Explore Memories with Momentum

Global demographics are rapidly shifting causing increases in the many dimensions of diversity present in most organizations and communities. These shifts have fundamentally changed the landscape on every front—economic, political, and social. This presentation will explore the use of visual images to surface, explore, and create memories with momentum that can be used by individuals, organizations, and communities to develop the capacity to creatively engage in new ways.

David W. Frantz, School of Business and Economics, Indiana University East

Memories with Momentum: Using the Arts to Enhance the Resilience of a Community

This is a case study of one community’s efforts to use the arts and humanities to move the community culture toward developing the resilience necessary to respond to drastic changes, overcome adversity, and recover from setbacks. The community is using story mining, storytelling, and visual imagery, coupled with inclusive dialogue, to create and evoke memories with momentum that can be harnessed to move the community toward cultural and economic vitality.

- MacKenzie • Workshop • Leadership Development

This hands-on workshop is based on a unique framework for the development of contextually intelligent transformational leaders. After presenters provide background on the development and design of the model, participants will have the opportunity to assess their own contextual intelligence and participate in reflective activities. The session will explore implications of utilizing contextual intelligence as a framework for leadership development and cultural change. Participants will leave with a resource list of the frameworks, tools, and processes presented in this workshop.

Practicing What We Teach: The Role of Faculty as Leaders

Chair: Bob Colvin, Christopher Newport University

College Professors as Leaders

The power of education to alter lives, to develop extraordinary human beings excites teachers, and yet students still walk away uninspired and under-engaged. One of the challenges facing faculty is student engagement in learning; perhaps faculty with leadership skills can better facilitate this process. This presentation will explore the concept of leadership promotion in college professors and asked how faculty perceives such individual leadership.

Making a Difference: Transformative Learning in Relational Leadership Development + LS + LD

This presentation involves participants in a shared inquiry on the themes that emerged from a recent qualitative study on transformative education in relational leadership development. These themes include: the relevance of relational leadership in today’s interdependent world; the level of development required; the role of transformative learning in this development; and the implications for practitioners to enact relational leadership in the workplace. The session will include a discussion on how to apply transformative learning theory in leadership education programs.

Under the Microscope: Surviving the Scrutiny of Being a Black Male Leader in Academe + LS

In this collaborative autoethnography, three Black men interrogated their experiences in navigating and positioning themselves as leaders in academe. The presenters will: describe common challenges of apprehending their positions as outliers; frame their actions/reactions as leaders under constant scrutiny; interpret their experiences through the intersectional lens of their socio-identities as Black males; and articulate coping strategies that are enabling them to be resilient.

Realizing Self through Otherness: Leadership and Diversity in the Classroom

The cultural and social identities of professors can be an important locus of learning for students and a critical springboard for their education in social dynamics, leadership, and global awareness — particularly when diversity is absent in the student body. Drawing on his experience as a male, Canadian-Jewish, émigré who has worked exclusively in the southern U.S., the presenter will discuss efforts to expand the world-views of students by addressing the complex dynamics of otherness and new ways of seeing.

- Leadership Education

Chair: Kathleen M. O’Connell, The New York Times

This session will provide an update on the NY Times in Leadership project, which was designed to give professors, scholars, practitioners, and students opportunities to connect leadership concepts to real-world examples. Over the past year, the NY Times in Leadership project has rolled out articles, discussion questions, reading lists, video content, and a catalogue of leadership case studies. The session will highlight these resources and present data collected on the project’s impact from the colleges and universities utilizing the resources.

Integrative Leadership for U.S. Security in the 21st Century
14:45–15:05 • Public Leadership

A prime challenge for U.S. political leaders and citizen activists is redefining security policy at a time when cyber-attacks, festering inequalities, and human rights abuses rival conventional military threats to the security. This paper presents an imaginative scenario that could guide integrative leaders who seek to transform national and domestic security systems in ways that protect civil liberties, guard against multiple types of threats, respect international law, and enhance economic prosperity. Integrative leadership practices are highlighted.

Barbara C. Crosby, Humphrey School of Public Affairs, University of Minnesota

Presidential Leadership and National Political Reconciliation + PL
15:10–15:30 • Leadership Scholarship

Among the many tasks that national political leaders can face, domestic political reconciliation can be perhaps the most difficult. This paper looks at four rather complex cases, with a total of nine U.S. presidents and over one dozen different instances of mass pardons. With a focus on the political rhetoric that accompanies and facilitates these actions, the presenter will assess their success and discuss broader implications for good political leadership in a variety of contexts.

Graham G. Dodds, Political Science Department, Concordia University

The Social Role Theory of Unethical Leadership (Refereed paper)
15:35–15:55 • Leadership Scholarship

Challenging the standard reasoning regarding leaders’ ethical failures, panelists argue that a potent contributor to these failures is the social role expectations of leaders. It is maintained that leaders’ central role expectation of goal achievement contributes to the over-valuing of group goals and greater moral permissibility of the means used to achieve these goals. The presenters will provide evidence for a social role theory of unethical leadership across four empirical studies.

Sociocracy: The Basis for Resilient Educational Institutions + PL
• Hochelaga 4 • Workshop • Leadership Education

Educational institutions require resilience to adapt, respond to, and even transform a demanding world. Student needs, community expectations, employee demands, and labour market trends pose complex challenges to education leadership. This workshop will be co-facilitated by individuals who’ve experienced firsthand how the use of sociocracy (or “dynamic self-governance”) provides the resilience necessary to foster efficient and agile leadership in the classroom and in the boardroom. Participants will work in small groups to experience key structural principles and a new decision-making method.

The Effects of Servant Leadership on Volunteer Engagement
• 15:10–15:30  • Public Leadership

Although servant leadership has gained interest in the popular press, scholarly literature, and theological circles, empirical verification of its effects on followers continues to be lacking, especially in non-western settings and across work typologies. This study empirically examined the relationship of servant leadership and follower engagement within the non-profit sector — a sector in which worker motivation and involvement are particularly important and do not always correspond to those in livelihood situations. Based on the findings of this qualitative research, specific leadership behaviors are recommended in order to promote volunteer engagement and retention.

Battered Leaders: Resilience, Antifragility & Constructive Paranoia  (Table 1)

Bullying, gossiping, mobbing, blaming, harassing, falsely accusing, impugning or even ignoring — all these and more are common experiences for many in leadership roles. Resilience (Zolli & Healy, 2012), antifragility (Taleb, 2012), and constructive paranoia (Diamond, 2012) may be new leadership tools for leaders battered by the range of threats above. This will be a place to share stories and solutions when faced with bullying bosses, toxic followers, recalcitrant systems, and rapidly-changing scenarios.

Fractal Characteristics of Resilience  (Table 2)

Drawing on research from a variety of disciplines, this presenter will propose a fractal view of resilience and outline three key dimensions that apply from the individual to the social level: creativity, complexity, and gender holism. Examples of how these dimensions function and an underlying theoretical framework will be discussed.

Leadership in Latin America  (Table 3)

From the conquest to the present, Latin American leadership has been characterized by authoritarianism, caudillism, machismo, populism, and considerable instability. Today, Latin America is a major economic, social, and political force. Further development will likely depend on the quality of leadership within and across Latin America. This discussion will explore the current trends in leadership within Latin America and focus on the development of leadership models that are based on the context and needs of the region.

Stability vs. Change: Confronting Reality, Developing Resiliency  (Table 4)

Within the leader-follower situation dynamic, no component brings uncertainty as does the situation — a truth experienced vividly today. Since “situation” bears toward either stability or change, these central questions for “leadership” will guide this discussion: Will effective leadership provide stability or provide change? How can leaders be effective in a world that is constantly changing, but that wants and looks for stability? And how does the development of both leader and follower resiliency help to make leadership effective in a shifting, unsettled world?

Creating and Sustaining a Culture of Workplace Forgiveness (Table 6)
Left unresolved, interpersonal workplace conflicts and fragmented employee relationships can result in poor decision-making, avoidance, or even revenge. An organizational culture with a core value of forgiveness has the potential to “encourage employee retention, enhance innovative problem solving, promote profitability, and facilitate flexibility” (Kearns, 2009, pp. 81–82). This roundtable will explore the responsibilities and consequences of sustaining a culture soundly rooted in shared forgiveness.

Thinking about Human Universals to Think about the Leader-Follower Dynamic (Table 7)
People are, at root, more similar than dissimilar, sharing the same universal fears and needs. Leaders and followers forge a relationship based largely on resolving or meeting needs, and on ameliorating or assuaging fears. This roundtable will discuss the idea of universality of fears and needs, examine the leader-follower relationship in this way, and explore why leaders emerge and ebb away when they do.

Answering the Call for a New Narrative: Applying Narrative Skills to Support Resilience (Table 8)
Participants will discuss the relevance of narrative as a skill set in leadership, and how people make sense of their worlds and organizations through story. The presenter will introduce the structure of narrative at the micro-narrative, meso-narrative, macro-narrative, and meta-narrative levels and show how being aware of these levels can help leaders use narrative to build resiliency in their organizations and communities.

Doug Banner, The Flow Project

Board Leader Development and Succession: Do We Have Something to Offer? (Table 9)
This discussion will explore higher education and nonprofit board partnerships, specific strategies used and findings from an action research study, and lessons learned from “academics” facilitating nonprofit leader development. Preventing Workplace Stress and Developing Resilience: An Individual or Leadership Responsibility? (Table 14)
A new report, ‘Stress in America’, indicates that Millennials (aged 18-33) report the highest average stress levels with 76% naming work and job stability as the cause. Coping strategies (e.g. eating healthily, exercising, and getting enough sleep) are not working. Contrasting, in the UK, the CIPD and HSE have identified a set of key leadership behaviors that reduce the likelihood of workplace stress and build resilience through preventative actions. Where does responsibility lie and how can we develop leaders to build resilience in themselves and their teams?

How Service Learning Can Specifically Develop Servant Leadership Qualities (Table 16)
Is there a positive correlation between curriculum-based service learning programs and the development of servant leadership qualities? Measured evidence of the development of service-oriented leaders would allow for better development and promotion of service learning programs. The presenter will provide an overview of recent research and facilitate a conversation about future research on this topic.

Creating Teacher Resiliency: A Dialogue on Professional Development for Leadership Educators

How are future leadership educators being prepared to teach leadership? How specifically can we contribute to or create new formal or informal educational opportunities and support systems for aspiring leadership educators? What systems of support and resources do leadership educators need? This roundtable will provide a forum for reviewing existing professional development opportunities, and more importantly, explore the relative gaps therein.

Design and Design Thinking: A Different Direction for Leader Education and Development

This roundtable discussion will explore the topic’s relevance to both graduate and undergraduate courses with questions such as: 1) How might combining select principles of design and design thinking foster a more engaging leader development for emerging leaders? and 2) Which applications of learning and teaching from the design field may offer a richer, more integrative experience of leadership in the education of emerging leaders?

Exploring Undergraduate Experiences: Identity Salience & Its Relationship to Resiliency & Leadership Development

In on-going focus groups, Asian American and Black students from a private, faith-based, predominantly white institution are asked to explore how their racial and ethnic identities have impacted their academic resiliency and leadership participation. This roundtable will discuss emergent themes from the focus group findings and will ask roundtable participants how their social identities have impacted resiliency and leadership.

Instructor Development Models for Furthering Educator and Learner Resilience

A large public university has a rapidly developing interdisciplinary leadership minor that has a model for instructor development specifically focused on creating an environment for instructor resilience to better hold the space for adaptive leadership. Instructors in the program strive to teach students techniques that will allow them to be more resilient as they inevitably face ambiguity and challenges in the world. This roundtable will provide an opportunity to discuss continuous improvement efforts for instructor development.

A Path to Growth & Sustainability in Latin America

Leadership Development for Global Education exists because theory and methodology courses do not adequately prepare qualified teachers in Latin America. Today, global learners and education systems demand leaders who have vision, broad world perspective, sense of responsibility, and the skills to impart each. This candid discussion will focus on key issues affecting education in Latin America, factors preventing the Ministries of Education from meeting their goals, and the solution that LDGE is providing.

Leadership Learning Pedagogies that Promote Civic Agency
Most education labeled as leadership on college campuses happens in a scripted, staff-created environment. Our conversation will focus on campus leadership pedagogies that break the “script” and engage students in testing their own civic agency. The facilitator will provide three pedagogies shown to lead to self-efficacy and civic-agency, and encourage others to share successful pedagogies.

Liberal Education and Leadership Programs — Fertile Ground for Developing Resilient Leadership?
Many connections exist between the principles of liberal learning and the objectives of leadership programs in higher education — connections that are becoming increasingly obscured as job preparation dominates the conversation about the function of postsecondary education (Kiley, 2012). The purpose of this roundtable is to gather leadership practitioners, educators, and stakeholders in conversation around the connections between leadership programs and liberal education, and allow for the emergence of ideas about how to strengthen these connections for greater resilience.

Round Pen Roundtable: Challenges of Doing Research on Equine Guided Leadership Education
This roundtable discussion will cover the unique challenges of conducting pioneering research in Equine Guided Leadership Education (EGLE) — collaborating with horses to teach leadership competencies. An overview and results from a recently completed pilot study conducted by the presenters, which examines the effectiveness of EGLE to develop emotional intelligence in expert nurses, will be the basis for this exploration in interspecies learning and communication.

Service-Learning for Doctoral Programs in Leadership
(Table 25)
This roundtable will explore developing Service-Learning Pedagogy for doctoral level programs in leadership. The discussion, which may be of particularly interest to program directors, faculty, students, and community leaders, will focus on integrating service-learning courses into the curriculum of doctoral programs in leadership. Presenters will investigate and bring dialogue to contemporary leadership challenges in service learning as they pertain to global and local resilience.

Tips for Teaching Multicultural Leadership Online: Focusing on Experiential Learning Techniques
(Table 26)
This roundtable will promote the use of experiential learning in teaching multicultural leadership in online settings. Presenters will launch the discussion by sharing examples of learning activities successfully adapted from the traditional classroom. Colleagues will be encouraged to share their own experiences and challenges teaching multicultural leadership in the online environment.

Publishing in Leadership Journals: Issues, Topics, and Solutions (Table 27)

Led by editors of a leadership journal, this roundtable will provide guidance on concerns faced by early and emerging scholars, such as translating dissertation/thesis research to article form, dealing with challenging revise and resubmit requests, defining the scope of a journal article, and aligning a paper’s methodological and empirical approach with a journal’s publication history and aims. Participants are encouraged to bring questions from their own publication experiences to this roundtable session.

Situations and Styles: Public and Private Leadership in the Case of UVA (Table 31)
President Teresa Sullivan

This roundtable will examine how differences in situation (e.g. public vs. private, commercial vs. nonprofit) and differences in style (e.g. telling, selling, participating, delegating; authoritarian, democratic, laissez-faire) affect the practice of leadership and the success of leaders. Participants will apply leadership theory to a leadership case study, the recent forced resignation-turned-reinstatement of University of Virginia President Teresa Sullivan.

There’s an App for That: The Role of Social Media in Leading Social Movements (Table 32)

The opportunities social media creates abound, including a potential for leading and promoting social movements. Few studies have evaluated the role of social media in advancing social movements. Through the lens of one movement, Miss Representation, this roundtable will focus on the organization’s use of social media to reach, engage, and rally supporters. Further, panelists will discuss the implication of the movement’s use of social media for leading other social movements and building resilience among women.

How Important is Resilience in a Youth Leadership Program for the Voluntary Sector?

This discussion will explore the importance of resilience within youth leadership development. Discussion questions will be posed based on research findings from an aspiring leaders program of the U.K. This is a unique program, developing 18-30 year olds into leaders for the voluntary sector in a rural area of England. The three-year collaborative program is between a youth charity, a university, and voluntary organizations. The discussion aims at relating the findings to wider practice and research.

Fifth Annual Emerging Scholars Research Consortium

Thursday from 16:30–18:00 • Le Grand Salon

Thank you University of Phoenix for sponsoring this event!

The Consortium creates a valuable opportunity to engage in meaningful dialogue about the latest scholarship and research being conducted by new contributors to the field of leadership studies. The Consortium serves as a venue for doctoral students and junior scholars to interact with senior leadership scholars. A senior scholar will be assigned to review a specific poster with the junior scholar who prepared it. The goal is to provide constructive feedback to clarify and sharpen this emerging research. All are welcome to listen in on these important conversations.

Schedule
4:30-4:45 Introductions and purpose
4:45-5:10 Senior-Junior Session 1 focuses on Group 1; Group 2 listens & observes

Learning about Leadership & Resilience: The Heroes within All of Us

Yuka Saionji is deputy chairperson of Byakko Shinko Kai, a spiritual organization dedicated to world peace and raising the consciousness of humanity that originated in Japan over 50 years ago. It was founded by Yuka’s grandfather, Masahisa Goi, who advocated the universal peace prayer, “May Peace Prevail on Earth.” Byakko teaches the divinity of all humanity, and hosts interfaith events such as the Symphony of Peace Prayers.

Saionji also works with the Goi Peace Foundation, which is dedicated to promoting world peace, and transcending all boundaries of race, religion, or politics with a belief that peace begins in the mind of each individual. She is a board member of the Miratsuku, a nonprofit organization working on community-building through dialogue around the affected area of the March, 2011 earthquake and tsunami. Miratsuku means “emerging future”.

In 2012, she spoke at the U.N. General Assembly about peace and resilience and received a standing ovation. Saionji is a member of the Evolutionary Leaders in service to conscious evolution, and she works with youth around the world on projects for peace. Saionji is also involved in the World Spirit Youth Council, which is a movement to activate spirituality among young people from many countries.

Saionji was born and raised in Tokyo, Japan and lived in the United States and Germany during her childhood years. She has a degree in law from Gakushuin University in Japan. She is the author of The Notebook of the Heart.
Leadership Legacy Award Winner

The Lifetime Achievement Award will be bestowed upon Alice Eagly at the general session on Friday and she will present her latest research at 10:30 in Duluth.

Leadership Legacy Honoree

Alice Eagly

An extraordinary scientist whose work transformed the field of social psychology and the psychology of gender, Alice Eagly is a leading expert on women and leadership. Her research into the barriers that women face in reaching top-level leadership positions is ground-breaking and comprehensive. Eagly is a social psychologist who has published widely on the psychology of attitudes, especially attitude change and attitude structure. In both of these areas, she has carried out primary research and meta-analyses of research literature. She is the author of Sex Differences in Social Behavior: A Social Role Interpretation, The Psychology of Attitudes with co-author Shelly Chaiken, and Through the Labyrinth: The Truth About How Women Become Leaders with co-author Linda L. Carli. Eagly also is the author of numerous journal articles and chapters in her research specialties.

Eagly’s book on gender and leadership, Through the Labyrinth: The Truth About How Women Become Leaders, was published in 2007 by Harvard Business School Press. Some of her findings appear in a 2007 article in Psychology of Women Quarterly, “Female leadership advantage and disadvantage: Resolving the contradictions,” and a 2002 article in Psychological Review, “Role congruity theory of prejudice toward female leaders,” co-authored with Steven Karau at Southern Illinois University at Carbondale. In a continuation of this work, she recently published a meta-analysis on stereotypes of leaders that focuses on the extent to which leadership roles are perceived in feminine or masculine terms and on differences in these perceptions between nations and across time periods; her development of the Gender Role Perspective became a broader evolutionary model of gender differences that highlights the flexibility in men’s and women’s behaviors across societies.

She has received numerous awards, including the Distinguished Scientific Contribution Award of the American Psychological Association and the Gold Medal from the American Psychological Foundation Life Achievement in the Science of Psychology, Interamerican Psychologist Award for contributions to psychology as a science and profession in the Americas; and the Carolyn Wood Sherif Award for contributions to the psychology of women as scholar, mentor, teacher, and leader.

Eagly received her bachelor of arts degree in social relations from Radcliffe College (Harvard University) and graduated summa cum laude in 1960. From there she went into graduate studies at the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor and received a masters degree in psychology in 1963 and a doctorate degree in social psychology in 1965. As scientist, social critic, and role model, she has inspired a generation of women to be accomplished researchers, teachers, and thinkers in psychology.

Building Resilient Leaders: Intrapersonal, Generational, and Cross-Cultural Education for a Sustainable Planet

* Bersimis  •  Symposium  •  Leadership Education

CHAIR: Kathaleen Reid-Martinez, Academic Affairs, Mid-America Christian University

This session will examine educational initiatives at the intrapersonal level and across generations and cultures, and will explore the limits and needs of educational systems as they relate to resilient leadership development. The presenters will demonstrate that resilience can be developed by using the right educational methods and that this can result in not only resilient leaders, but a more sustainable society and planet.

Intrapersonal Balance: The Development of Resilient and Moral Leadership
This presentation will examine the concept of a balanced moral and resilient leadership, one that ultimately provides guidance for leaders and organizations seeking to achieve sustained leadership through this intersection.

Clarinda J. Cole, Department of Education, Regent University

Generational Resilience and Leadership Development
The presenter will discuss research that examined the resilience of four generations of learner/leaders by looking at how generational similarities and differences made a difference in their leadership development.

Linda D. Grooms, Department of Education, Regent University
Tera Simmons, Butler County Board of Education

Cross-Cultural Learning for Leadership Resilience and Sustainability
The continuous leadership growth described in this study demonstrates an important constant in the evolution of resilience and sustainability, signifying that resilient leadership represents a process, not an end state.

Linda D. Grooms, Department of Education, Regent University
Kathaleen Reid-Martinez, Academic Affairs, Mid-America Christian University

Transformative Education for Resilient Leaders and Global Sustainability
This presentation will advocate that more transformative education will result in the capacity to build more resilient future leaders which, in turn, results in a more sustainable society and planet.

Kathaleen Reid-Martinez, Academic Affairs, Mid-America Christian University
Glass Ceilings, Labyrinths, and Jungle Gyms: Has Anything Changed for Women as Leaders? (2013 Leadership Legacy Awardee Presentation)

- Duluth
- Leadership Legacy Honoree Presentation
- Conference Theme

Has it become any easier in recent decades for women to attain leadership positions and become successful in them? Hints have emerged in cultural metaphors that describe the career challenges that women encounter. This talk will relate these metaphors to findings produced by research on gender and leadership.

Assessing and Teaching for Global Competencies: Essential Leadership Tools for Local and Global Resiliency

- Hochelaga 4
- Workshop
- Leadership Education

Assessing and teaching for global competence is foundational to leadership development program design. Educators are charged with helping learners to adapt to the constantly shifting challenges of the global marketplace. The presenters will employ the Intercultural Adaptation Model (Oddou & Mendenhall, 1985) as the basis of intentional instruction design for global resiliency, explore global mindset and other intercultural learning objectives, and offer best practices for teaching and assessment in this arena. Small discussion groups will give participants opportunities to discuss and share their own best practices and experiment with assessment tools.

Celebrate the Legacy of James Macgregor Burns: “A Burning Fire”

- MacKenzie
- Presentation
- Conference Theme

In this new hour-long documentary filmed at his home in the Berkshire hills of Western Massachusetts, Pulitzer-prize winning historian, ILA Leadership Legacy honoree, and political scientist James MacGregor Burns talks with his colleague Edward Burger about his life and times, his encounters with American presidents and other major figures, and the nature of leadership as he has studied and practiced it. After the viewing, the presenters will invite comments and also explain the discussion guide.

Creating Engaging Classrooms — The Whole Brain Approach

- Ramezay
- Workshop
- Leadership Education

Creating engaging classrooms is a challenge. As educators in an ever-growing diverse world, it is important to understand students with different learning preferences and communication styles and use strategies to engage them all. The workshop aims at introducing participants to Neethling’s 8 Dimensional Whole Brain Model. A multi-media presentation and other activities will equip participants with tools to pick up cues and understand the preferences of individuals in their classrooms. Then small groups will work together to develop whole brain activities for engaging creative classrooms.

A Consideration of Mormon Context, Institutional Climate, and Leadership Development that Enables or Inhibits Female Leader Growth
This study investigates the under-representation of female leaders at Utah institutions as compared to peer institutions and U.S. national averages. Using one Utah institution as a case study, this research considers female leadership development in relationship to past institutional support and climate dynamics. It also considers future opportunities for developing an executive female leadership pipeline despite the challenging contextual factors such as a patriarchal religious culture, institutional climate that lacks diversity and perceptions of fairness, and few female role models.

An Alternative Lens on Bullying among Leaders and an Approach to Creating Resilience
Bullying is relatively superficially understood, difficult to pinpoint, and even more difficult to resolve — particularly bullying conducted by leaders. This research offers a new lens on this behavior. Using case studies that explore origins of defensiveness and other research, the presenter will share an approach for overcoming defensive bullying through a productive set of values and strategies that create personal, team, and organizational learning and resilience. A legal lens will be provided on the relevance of the approach.

Eileen Piggot-Irvine, School of Leadership Studies, Royal Roads University

Mean Girls, Queen Bees, and BFFs: Diverse Perceptions of Women in Organizations
The presenters will discuss how women’s behavior to one another is socially constructed within and outside of organizations. The research hopes to highlight and dispel myths about how women treat other women. The discussion will begin with psychology research on women’s identity and move to the research results of what women experience as they develop in organizations.

Fostering Resilience in Stressful Situations

• Hochelaga 5 • Symposium • Public Leadership

CHAIR: George Reed, SOLES, University of San Diego

Combat Resilience: An Ongoing Battle
Resilience, in a combat environment, is not only necessary, it is essential. Every soldier lost to PTSD or other self-handicapping behavior is one less soldier available for combat. The ongoing tragedy is that the symptoms may not manifest themselves for weeks or months after redeployment. Suicides are at an all-time high in the military, necessitating resilience prevention and treatment. This presentation will examine how the leadership of the U.S. Army is dealing with this issue both in theater and upon returning home.

Ted A. Thomas, Command and Leadership, Command and General Staff College

How Leaders Thrive in Complex and Stressful Work Environments
Leaders do more than cope or survive in stressful work environments; they thrive in a way that transforms the situation, resulting in new growth and development for themselves, as well as positive work outcomes for others. The presenter will share a narrative study of ten middle managers in the public sector that revealed a “leadership thriving response” characterized by: systemic cognitive appraisal, inclusive communication strategies, collaborative and sustainable problem solving, individual learning and growth, and positive organizational impacts.

High-Potential Women and Resilient Leadership in Male-Normed Organizational Cultures

Despite strides forward, inequities remain between men’s and women’s participation in public and organizational leadership contexts. The purpose of this session is to explore potential factors contributing to this difference. This set of papers offers interpretive, theoretical, and quantitative approaches to guide the exploration of high-potential women’s leadership experiences within male-normed cultures, with a particular focus on the role resilience plays in effectively navigating leadership aspirations and responsibilities.

The Influence of Perceptions on Leadership Trajectories: How Men & Women Define Leadership and Themselves as Leaders

Studies have confirmed that women and men lead equally effectively (Ibarra & Obodaru, 2009), yet competent women may opt out of leadership when their leadership philosophies conflict with male-normed organizational environments (Helgesen & Johnson, 2010). This presentation will examine a qualitative study in which emerging leaders were asked to define leadership and to describe themselves as leaders. The findings offer data-driven perspectives on factors, including resilience, that contribute to effective leadership by high-potential women working within male-normed organizations.

Karen A. Longman, Doctoral Programs in Higher Education, Azusa Pacific University

Richard Wikkerink, Department of Student Development, Redeemer University College

The Interplay of Narrative & Communicative Competence in Women’s Leadership: Resilience in Male-Normed Cultures

This paper explores the historical development of perspectives on gender, offering a textured view of gendered leadership through the application of narrative and communication competence theory. The story of gender plays a significant role in perceptual, or cognitive, gender attributions that prevent people from being “gender blind.” Becoming conscious of the role of historicality permits women to frame flexible, adaptable, and appropriate discourse that promotes their leadership capability and resilience, while shifting the narrative horizon toward greater equality.

Jen Jones, Communication & Rhetorical Studies, Duquesne University

Work Relationship Orientation: Implications for Resilient Leadership

Work Relationship Orientation (Fritz & Arnett, 1999) identifies a pattern of relationship practices associated with a reflective or unreflective philosophy of personal associations oriented to primarily public (i.e., work) or private (i.e., nonwork) domains. This study was designed to test for differences in men and women managers’ Work Relationship Orientation. A discussion of the results will explore implications for women’s resilient leadership at the local (private) and “global” (organizational) level.

Complexity and Leadership Crisis in Africa: The Role of Enabling Leadership
The paper identifies the crisis of Leadership crisis as one of the most pertinent challenges confronting the African continent today. The continents’ challenges are myriad and complex. This study examines the complexity leadership model and argues that Enabling Leadership is about how leadership searches for solution among conflicting and complex dynamics. It is associated with how leadership responds to complexities and manages challenges, conflicts, and communal differences in a changing environment to accomplish results.

Anthony Olalere, Educational Leadership, Clemson University

Global Resilience through Social Movements: The Next Leadership Wave in a Shifting Planet (Refereed paper)
This paper proposes an approach to conceptualize the construct of social movement leadership (including the creation of a working definition) and includes a model of social movement leadership that focuses on antecedents, key characteristics, moderating variables, and the desired outcomes. The paper concludes with implications for theory and practice and is finalized with a discussion directing future research.

Leadership for Social Change: Mary P. Follett and Jane Addams
The presenter will share a comparative analysis of the leadership styles of two historic female leaders and their relevance to today’s social issues. This paper compares Mary Parker Follett’s models of collaborative leadership and followership, particularly her advocacy of “power-with” leadership, to Jane Addams’ social justice activism, especially her activities organizing for women’s suffrage and international peace. While Follett worked in business and Addams in community settings, they share important similarities in their methodologies.

New Horizons in Leadership Ethics
• Hochelaga 3 • Panel • Leadership Scholarship

This panel will examine the theoretical and methodological foundations of leadership ethics and look at new areas being developed by philosophers and social scientists. Those areas include an examination of the partiality of leaders towards their constituents, the implications of leaders doing things that are morally wrong for morally right reasons, and the ways in which various biases affect how people make moral judgments about their leaders.

Transformational Leadership and Dynamic Governance: A Partnership for Possibility

Dynamic governance seeks to bring “the right people” together to create strategy and make decisions. Transformational leadership seeks to create the mindset people need to work powerfully together. This participative workshop will focus on a case study at a midsize corporation where both transformational leadership and dynamic governance were used together to bring new approaches to organizational problems and opportunities, help people see the impact of their own organizational blind-spots, and allow for the practicing of some transformational distinctions during the session.

Not Just a Mission Statement: The Impact of Verbal and Behavioral Resonance upon Follower Identification and Engagement

This case study explored the link between an organization’s expressed mission and its operant goals and strategies. Research examined the leadership praxis and expressed follower engagement of an ecclesial non-profit organization, before and directly following changes in its stated mission and philosophy after ten years of existence. The presenter will share findings that both (a) articulate the mission with resonant verbiage and (b) model the mission with resonant behaviors are necessary to optimally promote group identity and follower engagement with mission.

MaryJo Burchard, School of Business and Leadership, Regent University

The Emergence and Use of Leadership Narratives

Leadership narratives are a growing and interesting area of research and practice. This qualitative research study examined the emergence and use of leadership narratives about organizational core values within an educational institution. This presentation will add to the understanding of leadership (authentic), communication (complexity), and culture (organizational values).

More than Organizational Incantations: The Role of Ritual in Developing Followers

This review of ritual and follower theories suggests an intersection valuable for follower development. Ritual embodies organizational values resulting in stronger social identity. Effective followers have robust social relationships, specific traits, and display acceptable behavior. The presenter will elaborate upon ritual’s ability to strengthen social identity, practice valued traits, and define normative parameters suggests ritual is a tool for follower development. Future research will be outlined including development of a ritual measurement, analysis of rituals across organizations, and identification of ritual translation methods.

Leadership Resilience in the Workplace: Emergent Strategies and Tactics

* Chaudiere  * Symposium  * Conference Theme

Chair: Blenda Crawford, Regis University

The presentations add to the literature by expanding understanding around leader resilience, identity, and influence. Specific contexts addressed include industry sector, race, ethnicity, gender, and tenure.

Realities, Challenges, and Leadership Resilience for the Female Executive:

Practices Revealed from across the Globe

Through the lens of leadership development work as identity work (Ely, Ibarra, & Kolb, 2011), the presenters will share the themes of their continuing research within the contexts of three cultures (East Asia, Latin America, and the USA) including: challenges, strategies to overcome challenges, resilience, progress, changes in career progression, and mentoring practices. Individual strategies that women use for themselves, as well as organizational strategies emerging from their research complement the findings in the Kellerman & Rhode’s (Eds. 2007) research.

The Still Small Voice Speaks Volumes:

Antecedents to Influence Strategies for Five Minority Leaders

This presentation reflects the findings of interviews with five minority leaders representing the fields of medicine, academia, private business, and the nonprofit sector. The purpose of this ethnographic study is to explore how life experiences identified by the interviewees as impactful, inform the influence tactics they currently employ. Within the context of this study, minorities are identified by race, ethnicity, gender, and age. Semi-structured interview questions focus on antecedents to leadership roles, particularly those individuals and incidences that are seen as contributing to leadership efficacy. It is anticipated that experiential stories will include components of cultural dimensions meriting exploration and further consideration.

Is Organizational Resilience Linked to Personal Resilience of Organizational Leaders?

Although there is significant overlap in the constructs of personal and organizational resilience, there is no consensus on whether personal resilience of organizational members leads to organizational resilience. The conceptualization in this proposal is based upon the review of extant literature and experiences of authors during a significant organizational shift in a public sector higher education setting. The research hypothesized that the senior leaders’ resilience is only indirectly linked to organizational resilience and is channeled through their multi-dimensional leadership work.

Chair: Kelsey C. Brunton, Office of Assessment and Evaluation, Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University

With increased scrutiny on educational programs, the need for evidence of student gains has never been greater. While a capstone course does not in itself change the learning that occurs during an academic program, it can help to clarify those gains for the students and stakeholders. This panel session will highlight capstone projects for leadership education programs at four different institutions.

The Experience of Systems:
The Centrality of Perception in Healthcare Quality and Cost Management
• 10:30–10:50 • Leadership Development

Hospitals are increasingly challenged to improve healthcare quality while reducing costs, but physicians (leaders and clinicians) and administrators are not always aligned on how to do it. What emerged in this qualitative analysis was three fundamental areas embedded in experiencing systems — people, structure, and perception, the key driver. The presenter will argue that centrality of human interaction and experiences is critical to systems continuously evolving and developing through the dynamic nature of structural influences, human interactions, and responses.

Foresight Leadership Skills Bring Resilience to Organizations in Times of Crisis: Lessons Learned from Medical Education
• 10:55–11:15 • Leadership Development

The global shortage of primary care physicians is a crisis that threatens access to healthcare by those most in need. Innovation in the wrong context will not solve this crisis, rather the key is to train medical education leaders on how to frame innovations in their proper setting (to provide expected or preferred outcomes) through dedicated commitment to strategic foresight principles and practice. This talk will connect the link between innovating in the proper context and practicing strategic foresight principles.

Building Resilience: What Nurse Leaders’ Stories Can Tell Us about Ethical Development
• 11:20–11:40 • Leadership Development

This research project examined nurse leaders’ narratives for insights into how they develop ethical knowing and how these apply to their leadership. The results support the development of nurse leaders able to successfully negotiate ethical dilemmas, promote resiliency in staff nurses, and create healthier environments for nurses and their patients. The findings have implications for leaders in other caring fields and in healthcare organizations and may also have application to the ethical development in leaders in other sectors.

CEO Leadership Lessons — “Real Life/Real Time”:
Perspectives from the Corner Office Column, The New York Times

- Richelieu
- Panel
- Leadership Education

Chair: Kathleen M. O’Connell, The New York Times

This session will spotlight a new component in The New York Times in Leadership project, using the “Corner Office CEO” column by Adam Bryant and his book The Corner Office: Indispensable and Unexpected Lessons from CEOs on How to Lead and Succeed. Launched January 2013, the project principally targets graduate school students taking courses and pursuing careers in leadership. The presenters will share on strategies used and emergent best practices.

Developing Dialogical Leadership

- Hochelaga 2
- Workshop
- Conference Theme

Addressing global challenges requires leadership that is rooted in a mind-set of dialogue, as Bohm described. Inspired by the Dialogical Self Theory of Hermans, the concept and approach of Dialogical Leadership will be shared. Presenters will start from daily leadership issues of their own practice, refer back to theory, and give best practice examples of leaders that are able to transcend their limitations through dialogue. After a short theoretical introduction, presenters and participants will engage in a dialogue to experience the power and impact of Dialogical Leadership. At the end, conditions and implications of Dialogical Leadership will be discussed.

- Ramezay
- Workshop
- Conference Theme

This presentation will invite participants to engage in a joint inquiry about: 1) what is evolutionary co-leadership? 2) Why is it urgently needed now? 3) What are some integral practices that enable its embodiment? 4) How can it catalyze the emergence of a co-creative and resilient society by calling forth large numbers of co-leaders in all sectors of society? In conclusion, the presenters will evoke examples of communities that increase their resiliency by building an evolutionary co-leadership capacity.

Developing Wise Leaders to Increase Organizational Capacity + PL

• Saint-Laurent • Workshop • Leadership Development

Organizations and society are plagued by leaders that make unfortunate decisions. Such decisions are commonly called dumb or stupid. But aren’t they made by smart and highly educated leaders? Could it be the decisions are foolish rather than stupid? This workshop will provide tools to develop leaders that think more wisely by learning to identify common fallacies, practice reflection, apply intuition, and engage in wise thinking. Participants will leave this session with ideas, models, exercises, and inventories that they can use to develop wise leaders.

On-Campus Mentoring and Leader Development

Adaptive Mentorship and Coaching Strategies for Academic Leadership Development

Leadership literature indicates that mentoring, training workshops, and coaching are among the most preferred strategies for developing leadership. Prior to designing an academic leadership development initiative, the authors first conducted a needs assessment to understand the culture, preferred strategies, and priorities. A collaborative model and a mixed methods approach were used. The study’s results (n=202) laid the foundation for the emerging leadership initiative’s design. This presentation will discuss how these results shaped the workshops, mentoring, and coaching initiatives and processes.

Generativity in College Student Leaders: Comparing and Explaining the Impact of Mentoring (Refereed Paper)

Preparing leaders to actively contribute to future generations is an important function of leadership education. This assumption was a cornerstone of this mixed methods study which examined generativity levels among 273 college students. The presenter will discuss MANCOVA results, which indicated that student leaders who mentor demonstrated significantly higher generativity than those who did not mentor. These and other findings offer important contributions to leadership and social responsibility.

Leadership Development through Collegial Mentoring: Experiences of a Higher Education Research Triad

This paper describes the use of mentorship to promote leadership development between two graduate students (PhD and MEd level), employed as research assistants, and a faculty member (also their academic supervisor), through the use of the Adaptive Mentorship© (AM) model (Ralph & Walker, 2010). The use of this mentorship model within the research triad offered the research assistants an opportunity to engage in authentic learning and promoted leadership development through collaboration.

Selection vs. Inclusion in Leadership Education Programs: Differing Perspectives

Hochelaga 3 • Panel • Leadership Education

CHAIR: Andrew Wefald, School of Leadership Studies, Kansas State University

This panel will examine different perspectives on leadership education. One perspective is that leadership education is beneficial for everyone and that everyone should be afforded the opportunity to develop their leadership skills. Another perspective is that leadership education should only be offered to those students who are already top performers. A third perspective is to restrict leadership education to students who achieve an above average academic standard. Representatives from each perspective will discuss each approach and engage the audience.

Teaching Leadership, Conservation, and Sustainability: Leadership Educators Preparing Students to Respond to a Shifting Planet

Perceptions of Leadership and Sustainability in Belize
Preparing leaders requires that educators provide leadership lessons that adequately match the immanent complexity in our world. In the past five years, a course at University of Denver has taken students to Belize to experience complexity emanating from differing worldviews, cultural values, and systemic change. Students also gain insight into the role leaders play in creating a sustainable future amidst this complexity. This session presents an overview of this course and in-depth research/analysis of student perceptions of leadership and sustainability.

Beyond the Egoic: A Spiritual, Interdisciplinary Approach to Shared Leadership

As Einstein said, “We cannot solve our problems with the same thinking we used when we created them” and therefore it is imperative to extend leadership theory and development to embrace a more holistic spiritual approach that produces resilient leadership able to address the challenges of a global society. This workshop will engage participants in an exploration of an interdisciplinary conceptual model of shared leadership that builds on concepts from quantum mechanics, psychology, biology, philosophy, economics, and spirituality. A combination of self-evaluation/reflection, interactive activities, and small group mapping exercises will be used to elucidate the potential, the enablers, and the barriers to this advanced approach to shared leadership.

Compassionate Conflict Management

This workshop applies John Gottman’s “Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse” communication styles of married couples to personal leadership. Through humor and compassion, participants will learn about their default mode of conflict (Criticism, Contempt, Defensiveness, or Stonewalling), how to recognize their own and other people’s triggers, and strategies to move beyond default modes of conflict. Participants will be engaged in a mix of small and large group work to expand their knowledge of their own mode of conflict and that of others which provide the foundation for compassionate conscious conflict management.

Design and Build Healthy Professional Relationships Using the Blueprint of the We Process

Used by companies, organizations, groups, and individuals in over 100 countries, the Blueprint of We is a collaboration process shown to establish healthier, more resilient business and personal relationships. Designed for a world that changes in increasingly complex ways, making the old leader/follower ground rules no longer reliable, this model of sustainable collaboration draws on Appreciative Inquiry, Open Space, mindfulness practice, and neuroscience research. The presenters will provide an overview of the framework’s five components, and then guide participants through a structured process to write and discuss their own mini-Blueprint. The workshop will conclude with the story of how an international virtual company uses the Blueprint and the impact it has had.

Improving Resilience through Dialogue

CHAIR: S. Lynn Shollen, Department of Leadership & American Studies, Christopher Newport University

Resilience can be defined as the capacity to preserve or restore an order by adapting to circumstances. Leaders and followers contribute to social resilience to the extent they can share reciprocal points of view. This can be accomplished by means of dialogue, which is possible only if participants can simultaneously entertain alternate ideas. This panel will discuss this capacity of mind and the dialogue that ensues in conversation and reading, before offering a concrete example of dialogue in post-conflict Sierra Leone.

The Capacious Mind

The Chinese sage Xunzi taught that leaders must be of one mind, though it would be a mind capable of entertaining contraries. What the Chinese understood as yin-yang duality or dialectics, the West has come to value as the opposable mind. Dialogue becomes possible only for those with this capability. In relationship, like mindedness for a shared purpose requires of the leader the capacity to “hold two opposed ideas in the mind at the same time” (to quote F. Scott Fitzgerald).

Nathan W. Harter, Department of Leadership & American Studies, Christopher Newport University

Schema Theory for Leadership through Dialogue and Storytelling

Frederic Bartlett’s schema theory is shown to be adopted in the leadership process by the techniques of narrative and dialogue. In recognizing how to adapt this skill in leadership, leaders and followers can develop resilience, both separately as individuals and together.

Leaders in Dialogue in Plutarch’s Lives: Lycurgus, Numa, and the Extraordinary Longevity of Law

Building Leadership Resilience through Community Dialogue in Post-conflict Sierra Leone

In many ways, Foucault’s (1954/2011) interpretation of leadership is demonstrated in the community leaders of postconflict Sierra Leone. Recovering from an 11-year civil war, chiefs have had to find new ways to connect with their community in order build a future rather than revisit the troubles of the past. One way this has been done was by incorporating community members in community meetings, which provided a space to share concerns and allow for a dialogue about the future.

Intergenerational Leadership: The Challenges of a Shifting Workforce

CHAIR: Tom Sechrest, School of Management & Business, St. Edward’s University

Impacts of a shifting workforce on today’s college students couldn’t be clearer. In the coming decades, it will be up to them to re-invent health, education, work, politics, and more, in order to align these institutions to the new kind of society in which they will live. Leadership will be needed to create these changes. This discussion aims at achieving a new and different view of population aging that reaches to the core of the profound structural demographic transformation of the 21st century.

Planning Resilience: Do We ‘Build It and They Will Come’?

• Hochelaga 5  • Symposium  • Public Leadership

CHAIR: Rhonda McClellan, Leadership Studies, University of Central Arkansas

City leaders wanted to attract and retain college graduates to build their community’s human and social capacity and therefore the local community’s resilience. Investigators identified the preferences of the target group, the city’s efforts to address these preferences, and the decision-making process for community development that would draw and retain this particular capital. In the attempt to attract and sustain human capital, did city leaders leverage multiple forms of community capital?

Shifting Approaches to Community Development: Resilience through the Convergence of Competing Agendas

Student researchers will present how hierarchical decision-making models differ from resilient ones that lead to sustainability, and how the pursuit and use of capital differs between them. Using this information, presenters will argue that the city’s pursuit of and appeal to knowledge workers (i.e., college graduates) may have compromised the community’s sustainability.

Attracting College Graduates: Is It All About the Money?

College graduates expand the capacity of a community. The more a community invests in improving human capital, the greater the productivity and eventually the economic growth (McGaughy, 2000). Yet, often the community leaders who pursue this human capital lack the knowledge about how to attract college graduates. The presenter will share the results of a survey designed to determine the factors influencing college graduates’ decision to remain in the city.

Jamie Stacks, Department of Leadership Studies, University of Central Arkansas

Processes and Players: Making Room for Complexity and Community Capital

This study investigated the processes the community used to determine that college graduates needed to be attracted and retained. The presenter will describe the process of identifying the city’s decision-making processes and those involved players. The findings complement the data gathered about the college graduate and soon-to-be graduate surveys and the network analysis.

Michael Blanchett, Department of Professional Adult College Education, University of Central Arkansas

Developing Resilient Community Capacity: Does It Pay To Have Connections?

Given that traditional hierarchical models of organizations are inadequate when examining the elements of community capacity and change, the researchers used social network analysis and positive organizational scholarship (POS) to identify patterns found within the social network. Telling findings for the city and the researchers will be shared including conclusions about how extending relationships across traditional divides led to collaboration and sustainable partnerships.

Resilience Reloaded: New Ways of Thinking about Leadership and the Strength of the Human Spirit

- Hochelaga 6  •  Symposium  •  Conference Theme

Chair: Marcy Levy Shankman, Cleveland Leadership Center

The construct of resilience offers a powerful framework for leaders working amidst and through a range of difficult situations. This session will explore how resiliency in leadership is central to understanding not only what constitutes a good leader, but how adverse circumstances can affirm the strength of the human spirit and enhance leadership practice. Using diverse theoretical and methodological perspectives including Tao philosophy, phenomenological inquiry, servant leadership, and grounded theory, panelists will provide insights regarding the nature of resilience, and its relationship to leadership.

Resilience Theory to Practice for Organizational Leaders

This research on leaders and resilience was guided by three questions: 1) What models and theories exist to inform the study and practice of leadership resilience? 2) What do leaders need to know to develop the resilience needed to overcome adversity and recover from setbacks? 3) What do leaders need to know to help organizations overcome adversity and recover from setbacks? The presenter will share preliminary findings from several worldviews where there seems to be common ground about resilience.

JoAnn D. Barbour, Doctoral Program in Leadership Studies, Gonzaga University

Leadership in the Crucible: A Hermeneutic Phenomenological Inquiry into the Resilience of Viktor Frankl

The presenter will discuss the role of resilience in leadership development and practice by way of a hermeneutic phenomenological analysis of Holocaust survivor Viktor Frankl's important texts, Man's Search for Meaning and Man's Search for Ultimate Meaning and then explore the resilience construct from a qualitative research paradigm, with an emphasis on servant-leadership. Research findings include suggestions for leaders to engender resilience in the people and organizations they lead, and pathways for personal resilience.

Philip Mathew, Organizational Leadership & Resource Management, Olympic College

Resiliency Reloaded: Authenticity, Gender and Leadership

Having a resilient attitude toward setbacks is a crucial leadership skill. But how do women leaders deal with gender and racial prejudice that may affect their ability to lead? Using data from a phenomenological study, conducted with ten female leaders in three different countries, the panelist will examine how these women leaders describe how adverse circumstances affected their ability to lead.

Rita A. Gardiner, Women's Studies & Feminist Research, University of Western Ontario

The Tao of Leadership Resilience

Lao-Tze, the author of The Book of Tao and master of paradox, spoke of resilience as acting consistent with ways of nature's spontaneity, rather than against, to discern complex patterns amidst the perplexity in human affairs. Non-action, labeled as “wu-wei,” signifies quasi-acting, contemplating on one's assumptions and leveraging shadow wisdom from within the leader-self before acting. The presenter will share how an understanding of the dynamics of light/shadow can stimulate possibility and creativity, deepening resilience.

Utilizing Observation Instruments to Enhance Student Learning of Leadership Practices, Theories, and Frameworks

- Hochelaga 2  •  Workshop  •  Leadership Education

This workshop will explore how the use of observation instruments can greatly enhance graduate and undergraduate students’ identification of specific leadership practices espoused by particular leadership theories and frameworks. The facilitator will reflect on classrooms experiences using observation instruments developed on the works of Kouzes and Posner (leadership practices), Kotter (change process), and Lvina et al. (political skill inventory), demonstrate best practices, and engage participants in focused discussion.

Resilience and a Commitment to Developing Responsible Citizen Leaders + LE

* Saguenay  * Panel  * Conference Theme

CHAIR: Jonathan R. Gosling, Centre for Leadership Studies, Exeter University Business School

The world is facing complex societal problems that are not amenable to technical or ordinary solutions — at least not within our current paradigms. Presenters from diverse perspectives will discuss the use of resilience when solving these complex societal problems — also known as “wicked problems” and engage each other and session participants in a lively dialogue on the ways to incorporate problem-centered pedagogy (i.e. service learning, action research etc.) when developing resilience in leadership development programs and courses for students.

Theory Building: Creating New Models for Resilient Leadership + LE

* Gatineau  * Presentation  * Conference Theme

CHAIR: Brad Jackson, New Zealand Leadership Institute, University of Auckland

These presentations introduce new models which challenge and/or extend existing thinking around resilient leadership within specific contexts and constraints.

Holistic Leadership: Building Resilience in Post-Earthquake Christchurch + PL

This paper describes a field tested framework that brings together meaningful work with key leadership capacities. It argues that rather than being the ‘best way’ to do leadership, each of the four key aspects of leadership identified in extant literature (the capacity to know oneself; the capacity to serve others; the capacity to work with and through others, and the capacity to stimulate new ideas and ways of thinking), must be balanced to build personal and organisational resilience. The presenter will explore implications for leadership theory and practice.

Marjolein Silvia Lips-Wiersma, Department of Management, University of Canterbury

Resilience and Values-Based Leadership + BL

The literature on Values-Based Leadership tends to focus on either understanding and consistently expressing core values, or prescribing certain values as necessary for effective VBL. With a desire to develop more resilient leaders, the presenter has combined these approaches to create a VBL model that encourages examination of one’s existing values in light of one’s life purpose, contextual factors, community affiliations, and the central texts that one embraces as ultimate guides in life.

Randy Wolff, ACTS Seminaries of Trinity Western University

Leadership for Resilience within Constraints: The Case of Climate Change

Unlike many past leadership challenges, the movement towards environmental resilience requires adaptation to systemic constraints. How can leaders inspire and motivate change that involves lifestyle sacrifices, and is often perceived as threatening core western ideals of freedom and self-determination? This presentation will examine the emerging strategies and rhetoric of climate change leaders – including youth leaders – as a case study of the challenges and opportunities of leadership for resilience within constraints.

The Value of Arts-Based Experiential Leadership Development for Female Leaders: A Snapshot and Reflection

Lize AE Booysen, PhD in Leadership and Change Program, Antioch University
Karin Hougaard, Karin Hougaard productions

While still unconventional, arts-based learning has emerged as an alternative or augmentative pedagogy to the more traditional rational-analytical competency based leadership development programs (Adler, 2006; Nislley, 2010). Taylor (2009) claimed that the arts might offer an “other” way, beyond the boundaries of science and analytic reasoning, to make sense of complexity in the business environment. This session will focus on the value of arts-based leadership training by reflecting on an interactive and experiential learning arts-based leadership development encounter for women, which was also offered as a pre-conference workshop at this conference. The presenters will unpack selected elements of this arts-based leadership development encounter in a “mini-snapshot-workshop” to illustrate its value.

Three Useful Models for Developing Resilient Leaders

Contemporary Leadership Spheres:
Resilient Leaders Develop for Self, Others, and Action

The model — Leading Self, Leading Others, and Leadership in Action — will be presented with a focus on its application in three contemporary spheres: 1) global leadership, which emphasizes relationships within environments that are characterized by interdependence, ambiguity and steady flux; 2) community leadership, which is based on the values of equity, service, and social justice and shaped by partnering, harnessing assets, and addressing community-identified needs; and 3) entrepreneurial leadership, which builds conceptual and technical tools that foster innovative solutions in sustainable patterns.

Creating and Sustaining Resilience on a Level Playing Field

Organizational resilience revolves around consideration of two critical variables: relationships and tasks. Utilizing the 5 + 5 Integrated Factors Model from the forthcoming book entitled The Negotiator’s Dilemma, this presentation will demonstrate how the active consideration of these two variables can help to steer organizations through even the most turbulent of times. The message is simple. The playing field is set. The modeled factors are ready to be applied.

Coaching for Resilience:
Leadership Development Utilizing Concepts of Meaning and Motivation

Resilience is the ability to bounce back after a critical blow or crisis. It includes the motivation to rise from the ashes and to re-engage in meaningful living. Hence, developing resilience is crucial for both individuals and organizations. This presentation will demonstrate how understanding human motivation in general, and the Reiss Motivation Profile in particular, can be utilized to coach for more resourceful resilience in leadership development.

Thomas Mengel, Renaissance College, University of New Brunswick
COVERING LEADERSHIP IN THE ARTS AND HUMANITIES, The Embodiment of Leadership explores the notion that leadership is both a discursive practice and a performative identity that is situated in a body that not only thinks, but moves, acts, has emotions and desires, ages, experiences, hurts, and senses. This idea moves leadership beyond the intellectual functions such as visioning, strategizing, and persuading, and the actions that emanate from the intellectual realm, and situates leadership firmly in a corporality that is raced, gendered, cultured, sexual, instinctual, and emotional. It suggests that leadership itself is an embodied text that can be “read” to discover personal and cultural meaning.

Each year the International Leadership Association publishes a book that captures the best contemporary thinking about leadership from a diverse range of scholars, practitioners, and educators working in the field of leadership studies. In keeping with the mission of the ILA, the International Leadership Series Building Leadership Bridges connects ways of researching, imagining, and experiencing leadership across cultures, over time, and around the world.

“From examining the way in which Michelle Obama takes up her role as First Lady to what we can learn about leading through attending to dance, this volume offers a much needed and exciting perspective on leadership as an embodied practice. Its challenge to traditional ideas about what it takes to be a leader literally made my spine tingle!” —Donna Ladkin, professor of leadership and ethics, Cranfield School of Management, Cranfield University, UK

In the spirit of intellectual exploration, scholarship, self-reflection and personal leadership development, the McDonough Center at Marietta College invites you to join us for the next McDonough Leadership Conference. All undergraduate/graduate students and faculty/staff members from any higher education institution are invited to present at this conference.

THE 2014 CONFERENCE THEMES:
Leadership in the Energy Industry  Business Leadership
Women in Leadership  Leadership and Ethics

TYPES OF SESSIONS:
- Undergraduate/graduate student sessions (panels with paper presentations) – original research, literature review, report from field experience (e.g., internships, study abroad).
- Faculty/staff sessions (roundtable discussions) – interactive sessions, information exchange.
- Poster session for undergraduate students.

PROPOSALS SHOULD INCLUDE THE FOLLOWING:
- Name of presenter(s) and contact information
- Session type (panel, roundtable discussion, poster)
- Title of presentation
- Brief summary of the presentation (approximately 250 words long)
- Relation to one of the four conference themes
- Set up needs (e.g., PowerPoint)

For more information about the McDonough Leadership Conference, please visit the McDonough website: (http://mcdonough.marietta.edu).

SUBMISSION DEADLINE:
All proposals should be submitted electronically (Word document) to Dr. Gama Perruci (perrucig@marietta.edu) by Friday, December 20, 2013.

Located in Marietta, Ohio, at the confluence of the Muskingum and Ohio Rivers, Marietta College is a four-year liberal arts college. Tracing its roots to the Muskingum Academy begun in 1797, the College was officially chartered in 1835. Today, Marietta College serves a body of 1,400 full-time students. The College offers 44 majors and has been recognized as one of the top regional comprehensive colleges by U.S. News & World Report and Princeton Review.

The ILA & the Jepson School of Leadership Studies are proud to present the 2013 Fredric M. Jablin Doctoral Dissertation Award to Ethan Bernstein. He submitted the chapter “Introducing the Transparency Paradox” from his dissertation Does Privacy Make Groups Productive? Joanne Ciulla is chair of the presentation. Ethan will present his research at 09:00 Saturday in Ramezay. The award will be presented at Saturday’s closing general session.

Abstract:

Using data from embedded participant-observers and a field experiment at the second largest mobile phone factory in the world, located in China, this chapter theorizes and tests the implications of transparent organizational design on workers’ productivity and organizational performance. Drawing from theory and research on learning and control, the notion of a transparency paradox is introduced, whereby maintaining observability of workers may counterintuitively reduce their performance by inducing those being observed to conceal their activities through codes and other costly means; conversely, creating zones of privacy may, under certain conditions, increase performance. Empirical evidence from the field shows that even a modest increase in group-level privacy sustainably and significantly improves line performance, while qualitative evidence suggests that privacy is important in supporting productive deviance, localized experimentation, distraction avoidance, and continuous improvement. The presentation will discuss the implications of this research and suggest directions for future research.

The ILA is pleased to partner with the Jepson School of Leadership Studies at the University of Richmond on the Fredric M. Jablin Doctoral Dissertation Award. This award is given annually to a scholar whose doctoral dissertation research, while on any topic and from any discipline, demonstrates substantial insights and implications for the study of leadership. The award was established to honor and celebrate the life of Dr. Fredric M. Jablin (1952-2004, pictured at right).
Flourishing in 2025: Focus and Flow in Continually Transforming Organizations

- Saint-Laurent  •  Panel  •  Conference Theme

CHAIR: Marilyn M. Taylor, School of Leadership Studies, Royal Roads University

The speed of change is accelerating, surpassing far beyond past equivalent time periods. Contextualized with a glimpse of the economic, political, demographic, socio-cultural, ecological, and techno-innovation world of 2025, this panel will offer organization and leadership practices suited to everyday turbulence, unpredictability, and accelerating pace.

Organization Design for Continuous Innovation

Productivity and change processes of conventional hierarchical organizations are still designed to optimize the existing product and service systems. To get to 2025 and beyond, organizations will need to be systemically innovative, which requires a radically different organization structure. A successful participative change process that embedded both continuous optimization and innovation in a small knowledge work organization will be described and the key components of emergent co-design will be highlighted.

Don W. de Guerre, Department of Applied Human Sciences, Concordia University

Shaping Culture as a Pathway to Organizational Adaptability

As organizational change becomes more challenging and enduring success more elusive, organizational culture is becoming recognized as a critical element of sustainability in a tumultuous context. Promising approaches and means of fostering change in organizational culture will be presented and the key qualities of organizational culture that are likely to be pivotal in optimizing organizational adaptability in 2025 will be proposed.

Marilyn M. Taylor, School of Leadership Studies, Royal Roads University

Leadership for Focus and Flow

The accelerating pace of change demands a sea change in leadership, one that exercises influence to shape organizational environments that foster both the constancy of focus simultaneous with continuous adaptability and flow to accomplish their missions. The critical qualities of leaders who accomplish both focus and flow in the work place will be highlighted. The features of leadership education that generate the quality of leadership needed in 2025 will be considered.

Brigitte Harris, School of Leadership Studies, Royal Roads University

One is Not Enough: Inter-Organizational Networks for Complex Challenges

The complexity, scale, and fluidity of opportunities and issues are increasingly beyond the capabilities of a single organization, instead requiring inter-organizational networks that transcend communities, professions, disciplines, and cultures. The presenter will articulate characteristics of successful inter-organizational networks and offer innovative thinking about structures and processes that reveal new possibilities for accomplishing common purposes.

Ronald Lindstrom, School of Leadership Studies, Royal Roads University
Broad and Deep Impact: Can Partnership Work as the Primary Strategy of a Leadership Development Program?

Most leadership studies programs design and deliver courses and other offerings directly to students. Following an assessment of leadership development needs, this major research university decided to weave leadership studies into the curriculum and culture through a partnership model—one where its leadership studies program’s primary mission is to partner with schools, colleges, faculty, and student affairs. What’s the promise of a partnership model? What are the lessons learned? And what are the model’s limitations?

Christian Organizational Ethics in an Increasingly Pluralistic World: Examples from the U.S. and Bangladesh

Globalization has given rise to unprecedented interaction among peoples and nations with diverse religious orientations. This panel will examine how two Christian organizations committed to social justice and inter-religious collaboration have developed a global ethic that facilitates effective collaboration amongst people from differing faith backgrounds. In reviewing global ethics as defined by Kung (2010), the focus will be how these organizations use ethics to facilitate inter-religious collaboration. This discussion will be instructive for those interested in religious ethics, culturally-adaptive leadership, globalization, and organizational ethics.

Collaborative Processes in Leadership: Developing Partnerships, Teamwork, and Communities of Learning

The objective of this session is to provide a forum to discuss issues related to collaboration in the leadership process. Collaboration is an evolving process whereby two or more social entities actively and reciprocally engage in joint activities aimed at achieving at least one shared goal (Bedwell et al., 2012). This definition implies that collaboration occurs between individuals, teams, and organizations. This panel will explore the roles leaders play at these three levels.

Exploring Mixed-Methods Research Designs for Studying Leadership

The amount of empirical research in leadership studies is limited. This workshop session will explore whether a number of different mixed-methods research designs can at least somewhat transcend the limitations of exclusively quantitative or exclusively qualitative studies of leadership. Workshop participants will identify empirical research questions about leadership that can be studied with mixed-methods designs and use a variety of design templates described during the workshop to conceptualize specific mixed-methods studies to answer the identified questions.

FSU Shifts: Presenting a Leadership Competency Model for Local and Global Leadership

Members of the Frostburg State University (FSU) Presidential Task Force on Leadership and their external scholar consultant will present a leadership competency model, discuss FSU’s unique curricular and co-curricular collaboration, and share how competencies are aligned and integrated into campus programs and curriculum. Pedagogy, research, resources, budgets, and staffing as well as how the competencies can be useful to faculty and staff development will be considered.

Good Governance in a Shifting Global Landscape

The purpose of this session is to present two research papers focused on governance in the context of a shifting global demography. Presentations will focus on the rapidly changing realities for governance in different contexts: (1) corporate, private sector; and (2) non-profit, higher education. Participants will understand, from a multi-sector approach, ethical challenges of governing boards as they address complex, global change; strategies for building governance capacity and resiliency; and how they might apply “good governance” findings to their organizations.

Diverse Constituent Interests: Governing in Pursuit of Balance
Corporate governance deals with diverse and shifting stakeholder interests. Corporate governance reforms seek to align management and ownership interests, induce greater transparency, increase accountability, and increase fraud detection. This paper explores literature on board practices that infuse business ethics in governance so boards can reconcile and balance the expanding identities of stakeholder and shareholder groups and their changing and competing interests.

Building Governance Capacity: The Quest for Diversity in Faith-Based Higher Education Institutions
This paper examines the intersection of board governance, diversity, and social justice in the context of faith-based higher education in the U.S. The presentation will focus on four areas: (1) changing context of Christian higher education; (2) non-profit, higher education governance, (3) implications of shifting demographics on governing boards, and (4) building governance capacity for diversity.

• Presentation
• Business Leadership

This presentation will examine a trio of practices to sustain individual and group resilience in the face of challenges and complexities in business and leadership. These leadership practices, when combined, provide a solid basis for continuous adjustment to the unpredictable changes of a shifting world. Hope is a belief and a process for propelling leaders forward; purpose creates meaning and sustains effort to achieve goals; flaneur is a perspective and set of skills for maintaining balance and applying wisdom in challenging contexts. The presenters will review connections between these constructs and effective leadership, successful career achievement, and joyful living.

CHAIR: William Gerard Weeks, Agricultural Education, Communications & Leadership, Oklahoma State University

One challenge leadership educators face is effectively adapting traditional methods of instruction to fit online course delivery. Panelists will share perspectives on teaching leadership in the online environment. Topics will include differences between classroom and online teaching, learning activities in the online environment, online leadership course and program assessment, and faculty preparation. The moderator will then facilitate a full room discussion to deepen this exploration of how leadership educators can improve teaching and learning in the online environment.

Progress for Women and Leadership in Qatar, Sweden, and the UAE: Opportunities and Challenges of a Shifting Planet

CHAIR: Julia Storberg-Walker, North Carolina State University

The presenters will share findings from three country-specific studies that focused on understanding the progress and experiences of women and leadership in two Middle Eastern countries and one Scandinavian country. This examination of two extremes — two countries that rank at the bottom of The Global Gender Gap Report (2011) and one at the top — is expected to launch a rich discussion amongst panelists and attendees.

Women and Leadership in Qatar

The purpose of this study was to research the state of affairs in Qatar in terms of the presence (or absence) of women in senior business leadership positions generally and where they are located within organizations (e.g., board members, chief officers, vice presidents, top management, division or unit heads). It is based on data mined from a major database in the Middle East North Africa (MENA) that tracks information about public and private companies in that region.

Women and Leadership in Sweden

The purpose of this exploratory phenomenological study was to learn more about one of the best places in the world for women to live and work — Sweden. Fifteen CEO’s, lawyers, and entrepreneurs were interviewed to understand the lived experiences of Swedish women in leadership. Themes, interview quotes, and implications will be shared to learn from these female Swedish leaders who, more than women in other countries, experience more pay equity, leadership, and management opportunities, and find more work-life balance.

Introducing the Transparency Paradox: Does Privacy Make Groups Productive?

• Ramezay • Presentation (Jablin Award Winner) • Leadership Scholarship

CHAIR: Joanne Ciulla, Jepson School of Leadership, University of Richmond
COMMENTATOR: Chris von Rueden, Jepson School of Leadership, University of Richmond

Drawing from theory and research on learning and control, this research examined the notion of a transparency paradox. Empirical evidence from the field revealed that even a modest increase in group-level privacy sustainably and significantly improves line performance, while qualitative evidence suggested that privacy is important in supporting productive deviance, localized experimentation, distraction avoidance, and continuous improvement. The presenter will discuss the implications of this research and suggest directions for future research.

Applying Job Embeddedness for a Resilient Multi-Cultural Workforce

- Peribonka
- Presentation
- Business Leadership

Today’s global economy requires leaders skilled at cultivating a multi-cultural workforce. Retention of diverse employees has become a key differentiator as organizations struggle to meet market demands. Job embeddedness reveals a model for understanding the complexity of employee turnover by examining the connection between community and organizational factors. The model is being used in a U.S. Midwestern city as it struggles to overcome homogeneity and compete for talent. In practice, the model assembles relocating employees to share coping strategies associated with assimilation.

Developing Leadership Capacity for Resilience: Theories, Practices, and Experiences

CHAIR: Jeffrey Mark Zimmerman, Department of Political Science, Criminal Justice, & Organizational Leadership, Northern Kentucky University

This panel will examine the fundamental importance of leadership capacity development in preparing students to become resilient ethical leaders capable of achieving and sustaining change and leading lives of meaning and purpose. Presenters will describe and discuss theoretical and program models.

Capacity Development and Meaning-Making for Resilient Leadership
Leadership development programs in higher education are uniquely situated to complement, enhance, and facilitate the meaning-making process that occurs during critical years of emerging adulthood, and in turn produce more resilient leaders. The presenter will discuss research examining efforts aimed at developing students’ leadership capacity in combination with the process of meaning making, and findings showing that students became more capable of engaging their own leadership style and identity, and more tolerant of the potential risks of taking action in new and unknown contexts.

Kate Sheridan, President’s Leadership Program, Christopher Newport University

Resilience as a Foundation for Developing Ethical Leaders
An emphasis on a realistic outlook of human experience, managing complexities and gray areas, continued self-development, and personal reflection represent elements central to the development of ethical reasoning and ethical behavior. By explicating the elements of resilience central to ethical development, this presentation will examine how fostering resilience in leadership education aligns with the development of ethical leaders.

Alison L. Antes, Political Science, Criminal Justice, & Organizational Leadership, Northern Kentucky University

A Theoretical Model for Developing Resilient Leaders: Applications for Study Abroad
A multi-layered theoretical model for understanding the development of resilient leaders while studying abroad will be discussed to help educators develop, plan, and assess study abroad programs. The presenter will share strategies to engage and develop specific leadership competencies and meet expected learning outcomes.

Student Philanthropy: Building Resilient Leaders through Community Stewardship
A resilient leader is one who is in tune with their community and capable of making decisions with community needs and interests in mind. The Student Philanthropy Project discussed in this session creates community stewards, and therefore resilient leaders, by engaging students in small grant-making to nonprofits through their coursework. To date 2,700 students have participated in 151 courses and donated over $700,000. Research demonstrates that project alumni are more engaged than the average population.

Global Leadership in The Classroom: An Organizational Model to Teach Leadership to Students

In this era of conflicting interpretations over global cultural norms, economic policies, and political ideologies, students are confronted with a troubling environment, but one that requires individual engagement. Many students believe that these global tensions reside outside their area of influence; the presenter believes that students can reinterpret their role by recognizing their leadership potential. Based on an undergraduate class called the International Leadership Academy, this paper explores the pedagogical framework to facilitate a more global awareness of leadership potential in students.

Ethical Leadership & Resilience:  + LE
Are There Universal Leadership Values, Rights, and Responsibilities?

Ethical leadership development is essential for diverse leaders, teams, organizations, and communities, and can contribute significantly to individual and organizational resilience. However, are there consistent universal leadership values, rights, and responsibilities that hold firm in times of rapid global change? Presenters will provide an overview of two diverse approaches to ethical leadership development implemented by a non-profit in India and a university in the U.S. and then engage participants in activities and exercises that can be used with students, practitioners, and community leaders.

Resilience in Practice

Resilient Leadership and Effective School Reform
A recent study suggested “school leaders are a resilient breed” (Ginsberg & Multon, 2011, p.47) who combine coping, disposition, and action-orientation” (Ginsberg & Multon, 2011, p.46). Their and others’ research findings suggest a relationship between personal capacity skills (values, efficacy, and well-being) and action skills (perseverance, adaptability, courage, and personal responsibility) as outlined in Patterson et al. (2009). This paper reports on these and other findings about resilience.

Leadership Lessons from the Dowager Countess
In the popular Masterpiece Theatre series, Downton Abbey, Lady Violet Crawley models resilience by remaining true to her sense of self, her guiding narrative script, and her way of being in the world, while adapting to disruptive social changes in early 20th century England. This paper adds to an understanding of authentic leadership and leadership resilience by describing how leaders adapt to disruptive conditions while maintaining a sense of self that is grounded in their guiding narratives, and enacted bodily.

How Students in a Learning Community Construct Leadership Identities through Peer Leader Roles

This presentation will offer findings from a qualitative study investigating how students construct leadership identities within a residential leadership community. Framing the study within the constructs of situated learning and communities of practice allowed for the examination of students’ identity construction as both a process and a product of their experience. The data revealed that as students move from being first-year members to second-year peer leaders, their beliefs and practices of leadership embody and reflect the mission-oriented design of the community.

Understanding Situations on Four Levels: A Key to Resilience
• Harricana • Panel • Leadership Development

This panel will share a model for strengthening the capacity of leaders and their teams to deal with complex situations. Houston’s four-level model has been used internationally in leadership development through the United Nations Leadership Development Program and other organizations. This panel will introduce the four-level model, correlate each level with competencies of art-infused leadership, and share recent experiences teaching the model to young leaders in Argentina.

Innovative Leadership through a Social Artistry Approach
Houston’s four-level model is the core framework of Social Artistry. The four-levels of awareness enable leaders to develop a holistic understanding of situations. When leaders understand the multi-dimensional complexity of a situation, their responses are more innovative and creative. This presentation will share the basic model and how it has been applied in leadership development internationally.

Seminal Moments in the History of Leadership Research

Leadership scholars have been generating theories since the beginning of the twentieth century. Research and scholarship have accelerated during the last 30 years and yet many are unaware of the early trailblazing work. In 1975, scholars gathered at a national conference on leadership findings to call for research modifications in response to identified missing approaches. This paper briefly traces leadership theory and argues that those 1975 recognized missing approaches were, in fact, dormant past theoretical constructs already embedded in previous leadership research methods.

Resilience and Innovation: Harnessing the Power of Female Entrepreneurs

Are women the key to creating new solutions to old problems? What steps can be taken to cultivate the next generation of female leaders and innovators? Learn from real stories of young females who have developed and implemented social change in their communities as participants of the Women as Change Agents Program (held in partnership with Leadership exCHANGE, the University of Monterrey Mexico, and the United Nations Information Centre).

Revisiting Leadership in the 21st Century

- MacKenzie

- Leadership Scholarship

CHAIR: Richard A. Couto, Union Institute & University

In 1997, at the culminating meeting of the Kellogg Leadership Studies Project, several of the female participants caucused, partially in protest of a lack new thinking about the future of leadership studies; the purpose of the project. The result was a prescient essay, Leadership in the 21st Century. Several of the article’s authors will assemble to reflect on their action, the substance of their article and the state of the field of leadership studies, then and now.

Teacher Leadership in K-12 Education

- Hochelaga 3
- Symposium
- Leadership Education

CHAIR: Robert Donmoyer, SOLES, University of San Diego

Expanding the Leadership Equation: Integration into Education, a Distractor or Accelerator?
A recent CCL white paper, Expanding the Leadership Equation, reported that leadership development should be available to all students as part of their educational experience before the age of 21. The presenters will report on significant progress made on integrating leadership development into the fabric of education. Three partnering organizations will share about lessons learned in creating a culture of leadership that develops all students through curricular and extra-curricular activities, builds faculty and staff capacity development, and creates frameworks, common language and pedagogy to sustain the work.

Preston Yarborough, University of North Carolina at Greensboro

The Intersection of Teacher and Leader: Voices from a New School
America’s K-12 schools are complex organizations facing increasing societal pressures and cries for accountability. Leadership in these organizations has to go beyond the principal to include teachers if school reform is to be truly sustainable. One principal sought to establish a school culture that embraced teacher leadership from its inception. This paper will present the findings of a quantitative and qualitative study of this school culture using the Katzenmeyer’s Teacher Leadership School Survey.

Co-author: Colleen Sheehy, University at Indianapolis

To Act or Not to Act? The Responsibility/Authority Divide in Education
The divide between the high level of responsibility bestowed upon educational leaders and the shallow limit of authority entrusted to them presents a conundrum for action-oriented individuals in critical situations: should they take action or not? The presenter will discuss a case study of school leaders that examined this question against the backdrop of the divide between the requirements of the leadership roles and the regulations governing those positions in the education system in Trinidad and Tobago.

The Engagement of Followers: An Empirical Consideration of Followership Orientation and Civic Engagement

• Richelieu • Panel • Public Leadership

CHAIR: Gene Dixon, East Carolina University
This collaborative project investigated the relationship between volunteers’ followership orientation and their levels of civic engagement. The study expands the research on followership typology and its application in varied contexts, and suggests a clear definition of civic engagement where none previously existed.

Wicked Questions and Polarity Thinking

• Saint-Laurent • Presentation • Conference Theme

Today’s leaders work with multi-faceted and intractable “wicked problems” on a daily basis. This session will present polarity thinking as a practical and strategic approach to understanding and working with wicked problems. It is currently being applied in leadership and social change programs in 25 countries.

Our Mission
The International Leadership Association (ILA) is the global network for all those who practice, study, and teach leadership. The ILA promotes a deeper understanding of leadership knowledge and practices for the greater good of individuals and communities worldwide.

Our Commitment to Realize the Mission of the ILA
The principal means by which our mission is accomplished is through the synergy that occurs by bringing together public and private sector leaders, scholars, educators, businesses, consultants, and students from many disciplines and many nations.

Our Vision
The ILA will be valued for its expertise in developing and advancing leadership knowledge and practice worldwide. The ILA strives to:

- Strengthen ties between those who study and those who practice leadership;
- Serve as a forum where people can share ideas, research and practices about leadership;
- Foster effective and ethical leadership in individuals, groups, organizations, and governments in the global community, and
- Generate and disseminate interdisciplinary research and develop new knowledge and practices.

Our Values

Inclusion: Fosters and promotes broad and diverse membership engagement.

Impact: Encourages leadership initiatives that advance the field of leadership and contribute to the greater global good.

Integrity: Insists upon effective and ethical leadership practices and sound scholarship.

Interconnection: Builds upon the shared interests and complementary talents of members to support individual and collective goals.

Interdisciplinary: Promotes and influences leadership as an interdisciplinary field bridging theory, practice, and multiple sectors.

International perspectives: Respects cultural contexts and facilitates learning and networking across national boundaries.

Strategic Plan
The ILA Board of Directors is responsible for developing and monitoring the Strategic Plan that guides the Association. Available online, it includes the following Strategic Imperatives for 2013–2017:

- Advance the global study and practice of leadership
- Develop and engage a more global and diverse membership
- Strengthen ILA as a dynamic, sustainable global organization
